At the second annual session of the Eastern Wyoming Wool Growers association recently Governor Richards showed that it is not only possible to run sheep and cattle together but it is also more profitable than conducting the two industries separately. He said that the idea that sheep ruin a range is a mistake and cited many instances where sheep grazing had improved the range 50 per cent. As for sheep ruining the range, Governor Richards said that his experience has taught him that sheep benefit the pastures instead of inflicting injury upon them and are of more benefit than cattle. Cattle dropping, he said, lie in spots, where it kills the grass, and unless the manure is broken up in small bits and scattered over the prairie it dries up and the fertilizing properties escape. On the other hand sheep droppings are scattered all over the range in small pieces where it enriches the soil immediately or before it dries up and is blown away. Hon. Robt. Taylor said that Merinos are the best sheep for the ranges of this section.—Daily Drovers Journal.

Some have tried the Infected Bug remedy but failed to get satisfaction and have gone to harvesting the small grain.
