ATRICK OF WALL STREET

How the Captains of Industry Secured a Favor.

SHEWED MOVE OF MONEY POWER.

Flattered Our Granger Secretary of the Treasury Into Throwing Open to Them the Nation's Money Vaults. Law Stretched to Aid Bankers.

When a granger gets to meddling with a stock ticker, trouble usually results. When a country lawyer or banker is introduced to the mysteries of "high finance" of the Wall street variety, he is likely to be an easy mark for our "captains of industry," as President Roosevelt calls them.

Captains of industry of the Wall street stripe are like three card monte men, the only difference being in degree. They are all gamblers trying to make something out of nothing.

When President Roosevelt discovered Mr. Shaw, he was a banker in a small town on the Iowa prairies. He knew the price of hogs, and he had a keen appreciation of the advantage of good crops and the prosperity that followed when nature showered her favors upon that fertile state.

When Mr. Shaw was selected as secretary of the treasury, his first step after being sworn in was to visit the subtreasury in New York. That government building is in close proximity to Wall street, and when the bankers and stock jobbers heard that Shaw was in town they called on him and showered him with invitations to banquets and entertainments. He held conferences with the leading financiers, and a programme was fixed up to aid the waning fortunes of what is known as the money market.

The bankers said their stock of money was fast being depleted by the calls for money from the west "to move the crops." This is the usual annual subterfuge for a raid on the United States treasury. The west was simply calling for the money its banks had on deposit in New York, which the New York bankers had loaned to the Wall street gamblers.

Secretary Shaw, from his experience as a country banker, knew that this fiction of Wall street furnishing the money to move the crops was merely a blind to cover up the operations that were to transfer the treasury surplus to his new found friends. He was anxious to aid them and "save the country" and his party, for Shaw is a partisan.

The Chicago Chronicle, which cannot be said to be antagonistic to the money power, in its issue of Oct. 2 gave a full account of the connection of the administration with the New York bankers, in which it said:

"The secretary of the treasury extended a favor to these men, which, it is admitted, saved Wall street from a disastrous panic. The favor was all the more valuable because the secretary was compelled to put aside some of the most sacred traditions of the treasury department and place constructions on laws that may not hereafter be sustained by the courts. The favor was not the secretary's. It was the administration's. Wall street can charge it directly to President Roosevelt."

From this it will be seen that the extraordinary aid to Wall street that has stretched the law in favor of Morgan and the trusts to the point "that may not hereafter be sustained by the courts" was a well concocted scheme to aid the stock gamblers at the expense of the people.

The country banker who had hardly warmed his chair as the secretary of the treasury had been introduced to the Wall street game and had at once fallen in love with it. Perhaps he had a tip in return on how the market was going. Like many an unwary granger seeking gold bricks in Gotham he may later be a wiser but a sadder man.

Last Saturday the Editor in company with Mr. Parker a representative of Collier's Weekly visited the Post and called upon several of the officers whom we found to be genial good hearted men despite the positions they hold which require of them severity in many cases in which they are performing a duty and must overlook immediate surroundings in the endeavor to bring about a great result. Yet we found these men genial sociable hospitable generous broad minded men who could be royal entertainers or stern commanders as the occasion demanded. Lieut. Enochs escorted us to Major Brush's office where we found him busy at his desk, a man of mature years but of sound physique and many days of good service yet before him. Capt. O'Neil is a hale hearty man who enjoys health in any climate as his good nature I laugh would convince the most inquisitive though the Captain thinks this is the best climate in the world and is feeling fine. Lieut. Donald and Straat are young men of sound health and good habits who will in time reach higher positions. Dr. Shockley is a young man of more than common ability as a surgeon and physician, is enjoying good health from being of good physique and was taught good habits by that good old man the Major Shockley who says he can now enjoy 5 hours of exercise in the open air and thinks this the finest climate in the world and that there is no better place for invalids to recruit lost health. The Major came here an invalid but walks around now and enjoys life. Three bright young men, his sons do honor and credit to his name. Hospital Steward Hunter was very busy retouching some pictures which he had taken during leisure hours. Postmaster Maloney with his usual bright countenance was kept busy with mail. Joe Roth and several helpers were busy in the blacksmith shop. A mouse colored mule occupied the attention of Ed Backler and a veteran horse shoer. Amos Randall the Wheel Wright had time to shake hands and speak pleasantly. J. W. Ferguson the engineer of the Water Works was found busy at his post of duty where he has been a faithful man the past three years.

A gun was accidentally discharged by little Clay Brown the charge striking his sister's dress setting it on fire.

A colored fellow from the Ft., started to town Saturday night, and Sunday morning found himself at Penbrook.

We would like to call the attention of our county board of commissioners to the fact that the bridge known as the Bruce bridge, in the eastern part of the county is in very dangerous condition.
