The Telephone.

There are blessings that come to us daily, Of which we give scarcely a thought; Our trials and our cares we bemoan them, But are blessings are considered as naught;

You may talk of the modern inventions, That comfort to mankind doth bring; But of all the inventions I've heard of, The telephone surely is king.

There are cranks of all sizes and ages, There are cranks of degree high and low, Who declare that a telephone system On wire fences, never will go.
