"As a live stock market, Chicago stands second to none," said a well rep.........8,000 known dealer yesterday. Bohle has sold his restaur- over four million hogs, a hundred quite a growth for the 55 years since the first shipment."

The stockman ruminated a moment. "That first shipment was queer, now, wasn't it?" he continued. "Did you see that little account of it in the papers the other day? Young Millican Hunt, now over 80 years old, had started across the prairies to market with a sled load of hogs and when he got across the Des Plaines River he found there was no snow on which to draw his pigs the rest of the journey. "That was in '48, the year the Galena road, now the Chicago & Northwestern, built its first ten miles; and young Hunt made a dicker with the crew of a constuction train, loaded his porkers on the train, and rode into Chicago triumphant, behind the little old pioneer.' "Was you ever out to the Field Columbian Museum?" he continued. "Well, you should go out there some day and see that old locomotive. She stands for a good deal from Chicago's point of view. - Brought in the first load Several parties are rounding up of live stock, and the day the road was opened and the mayor and the Goodin Bros. put up a new wind big men of the town were trying the novelty of a ride on the first regulag train, she pulled the first Geo. McCubbin was in Bailey rail shipment of grain into town. Framer out on the prairie hailed the junketers and loaded his wheat on, a good deal like Hunt had the hogs carried in.

"They tell me now," he went on, slowly shifting his position, "that last year that load of hogs had grown to over 65,000 carloads of live stock brought into Chicago over The Northwestern Line, and instead of one wagon load of wheat 30,000,000 bushels of grain to the well named, young man, according to my view of things."
