From the Cow Boy we learn of the lightning striking Bishop & Young's grain house in the front part of which is their office. The building was severely dealt with and badly shattered but Mr. Young and his son Dickey, who were in the office were not even shocked though the lightning played all around them. The walls inside and out were blackened, the window glass broken two feet from where Dickey stood leaning against the window casing, and the posts upon which the building stands being split.
