TEMPER PRESERVING HAIR BRUSHES

A hair brush is a long lived article. Things that last should be bought right. A hair brush is one of the little things that adds to or detracts from daily comfort. A poor one wouldn't penetrate the hair, and is a perpetual nuisance.

You can't get a poor one here, no matter how little you pay, and for 50 cents and upwards you can get the kinds that last a score of years and are a satisfaction while they last.

The Cause of Wry Tails.
The cause of wry tails is obscure, but is attributed to an injury to the hip or some part of the rear of the body, which causes a deformity. Examine a wry tailed chicken after dressing it and you will usually find, we think, that it is a deformity of some part of the body, usually of the hip, that causes it. It has been argued that such deformities are caused by overcrowding in the brooder or being crowded into a cramped position for several hours when the bones are soft and plastic. This, however, is theory only.

Give the Chicks Shade.
Provide shade in both the poultry yards and the chick runs. If nothing better can be afforded, erect canopies or tents. These can be made out of old bagging. If properly protected and rightly fed chicks grow rapidly during hot weather, as they can gather many bugs and worms.

A Good, but Neglected Breed.
The New England Poultry Journal believes that the now neglected, though once pre-eminent poplar, Light Brahma, when properly handled is one of our most profitable breeds of fowls. There are a lot of folks who agree with the New England Poultry Journal.

No "Best Way" to Feed.
There is no best way to feed the different breeds. Feed anything that will produce results. Whole wheat, oats and barley are good feeds for all varieties of poultry.

FEEDING SKIM MILK.

Experiments Show That It is a Valuable Ration For Fowls.
A writer in the American Poultry Advocate has the following to say of the value of skim milk as a partial ration for fowls:

The West Virginia experiment station has recently made some systematic tests to prove the value of skim milk for laying hens. The first test covered 122 days. The twenty-two hens fed skim milk laid 1,244 eggs as compared with 996 eggs laid by the twenty-two hens fed mash wet with water. In another test sixty hens fed the skim milk ration laid 862 eggs in thirty-seven days as compared with 632 eggs laid by a similar lot fed no skim milk. Other tests gave about the same comparative results. The conductors of these experiments estimate that under the prevailing conditions and with eggs selling for 20 or 25 cents per dozen the skim milk used for moistening the mash had a feeding value of from 1 1/2 to 2 cents per quart. That milk is one of the best general foods for almost all stock and human beings, too, is recognized by everybody and needs no special proof. That it should have better results in nutrition than just plain water is really self evident. When I feed skim milk to my fowls, I do expect to get some benefit from it. But it is a satisfaction to know that it is worth, for feeding purposes, the comparatively high figure of 1 1/2 or 2 cents a quart. At the Ontario experimental farm some tests of the value of skim milk, whey, etc., as an addition to grains for fattening poultry have recently been conducted. From a summary of data on the relative value of whey, skim milk and numerous feeds for fattening chickens it appears that gain was most cheaply made on a mixture of equal parts of cornmeal, oatmeal and shorts mixed with whey, the cost being 4 cents per pound, and was most expensive (6 cents per pound) on a mixture of equal parts of cornmeal, shorts and oatmeal, with 50 per cent of pork scrap, water being used to wet up the ration. It was found that sour skim milk (milk that is thickened) is without doubt the best liquid to mix with grain rations where a uniform product is wanted and more so where white fleshed chickens are in demand; also that sweet skim milk has not so high a feeding value for grown chickens as sour milk and that whey is a better food than is generally considered. It seems to aid digestion.

Liquid Lice Killers.
As a general rule, the commercial liquid lice killers are more dependable and satisfactory than homemade kerosene mixtures. However, the following combinations will be found reliable if carefully used: A saturated solution of crude naphthalene flakes in kerosene, made by dissolving in kerosene all it will take up of crude naphthalene flakes, makes an effective lice paint and is a good remedy for scaly leg. Two fluid ounces of any coal tar disinfecting liquid mixed with a gallon of kerosene is an effective lice paint for destroying red mites and coop lice. Either of these preparations used as a liquid lice paint about the roosts and dropping boards should be applied in the forenoon or before the middle of the day, so that they will thoroughly dry into the woodwork before the fowls go to roost.

Preparing Broilers For Market.
A fat broiler is quite a rarity. The best that can be done in general is to have them plump, for the natural tendency of the chick is to use all nutriment for growth and development. When the birds are nearly large enough for the market, they should be given all the fattening feed they will eat, and for this purpose corn in various forms should be fed freely. They will digest more feed if fed ground than if whole or cracked. A moistened mash consisting of about two-thirds cornmeal and one-third bran by bulk is good. Cooked potatoes are good, and milk, with a little sugar added, will hasten fattening.

Liver Trouble In Fowls.
When a few hens in a flock show symptoms of advanced stages of liver trouble, it is reasonable to conclude that others in the flock are in the earlier stages. Give the flock a grass run if possible. If not, give green food liberally, avoid the excessive use of corn, and try to secure a considerable amount of exercise for the fowls. This is best accomplished for fowls in confinement by feeding the grain in litter and feeding rather sparingly at first. This reduction of diet should not be continued too long. If it is, the birds become weakened and reduced in flesh.

The Feather of the Hen.
The shaft of the feather is the stem of the feather, that part which is filled with pith and which bears the barbs. The barbs are the side branches of the feather. Shafting means that the shaft of the plumed portion of the feather is either lighter or darker than the web of the feather. The web of the feather is the flat or plumed portion of the feather made up of a series of barbs on either side of the shaft.

Fattening Crates.
Fattening crates are made with slat bottoms. The leg weakness of chickens confined in crates is often due to the ration being too one sided. A little bone meal or granulated raw bone added to the mash will usually prevent this trouble, or use cut clover and cut alfalfa freely.

The Valuable Trap Nest.
The Industrious Hen firmly believes that the trap nest is one of the greatest blessings within reach of the poultryman.
