THE MILES OF THE GODS.

ADMIRAL PLAYS WITH BOYS.

But He's Only Two and a Half Years

Boston is peculiarly interested in the progress and growth toward manhood of the son of the late Marquis of Donegal, because his mother was at one time a resident of that city, was a student at the Quincy Mansion school, and later attended Wellesley College, from which she was graduated.

The widowed Morchioness was Miss Halifax, N. S., and in Frederickton, N. B. She was intensely English and at the time of the Boer war went to South Africa with her mother, where they ministered to the British soldiers. Later they went to London and the young woman was presented at court, where she met the Marquis of Donegal, then 80 years old.

The marquis had been bereft of his first wife by death and had divorced his second one after several suits, in one at least of which she brought a counter action against him. Neither of his lives had presented him with a child and the old marquis desired to marry the pretty Canadian girl, says the Boston Globe.

She accepted him and they were married in London on Dec. 23, 1902. The marchioness was then 22 years old. She gave birth to a son, the most noble the lord high admiral of Lough Neagh, as he is named and known. The old marquis died May 15, 1904.

The Marquis of Donegal is hereditary lord high admiral of Lough Neagh and is permitted to wear a naval uniform similar to that of the king.

The lord high admiral is a baby of so many titles and honors that he would be really quite a formidable person to meet, for Edward Arthur Donald St. George Hamilton Chichester, sixth marquis of Donegal, is also Viscount Chichester, baron of Belfast, earl of Donegal, earl of Belfast and Baron Fisherwick.

In addition to his high naval command he also holds military rank as hereditary governor of Carrickfergus castle, an ancient fortress near his ancestral home of Castle Chichester. County Antrim, which does not require much government, however, for although a few heavy guns are, indeed, mounted there, it is used now only as an arsenal.

Such a string of honors might have a depressing effect upon some people, but it does not seem to weigh heavily upon the spirits of this small person, and he plays with his toys in his nursery just as happily as if he had no inland sea and no grim fortress depending upon his exertions for defense!

As he is a peer in the United Kingdom, there is a seat waiting for him in the House of Lords, but he is not very much puffed up about that. In fact, it is said of his lordship that he does not think much of the House of Lords. and-that a seat upon a good rocking horse is, in his opinion, something which is far more worth having.

THE CAT AND THE MAGPIE.

hood Coldness in Kansas City.

This is the story of a cat and a magple, says the Kansas City Times. A few days ago they might, have been written about in the present tense in some such manner as this:

The cat is fine and sleek and fat: the magpie is happy and talkative and mischievous. Side by side they live out on Brooklyn avenue-the exact block doesn't matter. Their owners are happy, too, and dwell together in harmony and serenity, as neighbors should. The cat is a beauty, striped and marked as a tiger is.

All this might have been written a few days ago. It's different hw. This is the way the change that makes the past tense necessary happened:

The magple, heedless of its danger, was roaming about in the back yard, gathering choice bugs and worms. The tiger cat, lying lazily in the sunshine, watched the bird through half-closed eves. Then something within seemed to action. Slowly it arose, blinking in the sun, and crouching low began to sneak toward the saucy, black-feathered bird. At that moment the owner of the magpie happened to be looking from an upstairs window. In an instant he noted the snakelike approach of the tiger cat and the danger to his feathered pet. Nearer and nearer crept the tiger cat and at last gathered itself for a spring. A puff of smoke, the sharp crack of a small target rifle and the tiger cat lay stretched on the grass, its body quiver-Violet Twining, whose father, heavily ing, a bullet buried in its brain. Chatinterested in shipping affairs, lived in tering the magpie hurried off in search

The cruel murder caused great excitement in the neighborhood. Gentle hands fashioned a wooden box lined with white muslin. The tiger cat was laid within and the box buried. There were tears, too-yet, salty, sad tears for the poor tiger cat. But more. There was an oath—a solemn oath—of

The owner of the magple tried to blame the affair on his marksmanship by saying he had intended to hit a stray cat on the back fence and not the pet tiger cat, so beloved by its master and mistress. His explanation was in vain. The magple isn't safe outside its own yard now and the slight bows with which the bird's owner is greeted by his part neighbors makes him think of January and heavy snows and long,

Nobody knows just how it'll end.

PROPER BREATHING.

More Essential than a Beautiful Voice for Perfect Singing.

I cannot too forcibly insist that the mere possession of a lovely voice is only the basis of vocal art. Nature occasionally startles one by the prodigality of her gifts, but no student has any right to expect to sing by inspiration any more than an athlete may expect to win a race because he is naturally fleet of foot.

Methods of breathing, "attack" and the use of registers must all be perfectly understood by the successful singer, who should likewise be complete master of all details relating to the structure and use of those parts above the voice box and be convinced of the necessity of a perfectly controlled chest expansion in the production

For perfect singing, correct breathing, strange as it may sound, is even more essential than a beautiful voice. No matter how exquisite the vocal organ may be, its beauty cannot be adequately demonstrated without proper breath control. Here is one of the old Italian secrets which many singers of to-day wholly lack, because they are unwilling to give the necessary time for the full development of breathing power and control. Phrasing, tone, resonance, expression, all depend upon respiration, and, in my opinion, musical students, even when too young to he allowed the free use of the voice, should be thoroughly taught the principles of breathing.-Nellie Melba in Century.
