THE RAILROADS AND THE JUDICIARY

A CORPORATION MAN SELECTED AS CHAIRMAN!

When the campaign for nominations opened in this judicial district it was openly charged by more than one republican candidate for the nomination that the railroads of this district were endeavoring to secure the nomination of James A. Douglas of Rock county, who, as a member of the legislature had supported every measure favored by the railroads, and had opposed every measure demanded by the people. His work as a railroad lobbyist was so open and notorious last winter during the legislative session that such republican papers as the Omaha Bee charged him with being a corporation capper and lobbyist. By bringing out seven candidates for nominations, when only two nominations could be made, they succeeded in so dividing the anti-corporation vote in the district that their candidate Douglas slipped through and secured the nomination for the east end of the district. One Daniel B. Jencks of Chadron was at the same time selected as the candidate for the west end. Jencks was so little known in the district and had attracted so little notice during the primary campaign that his nomination came as a complete surprise. It was not understood how an attorney, scarcely heard of before, had beaten five well known lawyers and secured the nomination. Of course, everyone knew that Douglas had the support of the railroads and that their undivided support had won him the place, but not until after the primaries it was discovered that Mr. Jencks also had the support of the railroads and that the same influence had nominated both. They were both on the same slate and were both slipped through by inducing five other attorneys to enter the race, and while they were dividing the rank and file of the party vote, the corporation cappers were working for the slate.

Now, that the nominations have been secured, the railroads are coming out in the open and taking charge of the campaign. First, Douglas and Jencks are found at Norfolk holding a conference with Supt. Reynolds of the Northwestern railroad. Then they journeyed together to Valentine and spent a day in conference with C. H. Cornell, president of the First National Bank. Then it is given out that Mr. Cornell has been selected as chairman of their committee, and, a few days later, Candidates Douglas and Jencks, and R. R. Dixon, the railroad attorney at O'Neill, and N. D. Jackson, the railroad attorney at Neligh, and B. T. White, of Omaha, the general attorney for the Northwestern system, all met at Bassett. Of course the public was not invited to that conference at Bassett. We do not know what was said and done. Probably the public will be told that they were called there on legal business. Whatever explanation may be made the fact remains that they were all there in conference together.

Along with all this comes the information that Jencks is the old attorney for the road at Chadron. When these circumstances are all taken together could there be stronger proof that both Douglas and Jencks are the candidates of the railroads of this district. Douglas is denounced by the Omaha Bee as a railroad lobbyist. Jencks is admitted to be the former attorney for the road, and, since his nomination, is found caucusing with a coterie of railroad attorneys and politicians.

Just think what a spectacle it was!—the two candidates for district judges in this district caucusing with B. T. White, the general attorney for the railroad, and Railroad Dixon and N. D. Jackson, two of his under attorneys, and the political bosses of their respective counties. Then, consider the choice of chairman:

Mr. Cornell was elected to the senate from this district some 20 years ago, and, from the day he took his seat in the senate until the passage of the anti-pass law by the last legislature, he carried a free pass over the road. During all this time he has been the political manager for the railroad in this county—the one man to whom the president and general manager of the road look for favors—political and otherwise. Himself and the railroad managers have worked together for a good many years, and, now, when they are especially interested in getting hold of the district bench, he is the man they select to lead their candidates out of the wilderness. You will be getting letters and literature on the judicial situation later on, and, when you get those letters and circulars, take a careful look at the signature and see if it is not C. H. Cornell's—the same name that has been on the railroad company's list of free pass-holders for 20 years. Then cast your mind's eye back 20 years if you have lived in the county that long, and see if he is not the man who has always been called in and consulted when the railroads wanted anything in this part of Nebraska.

You may wonder why the railroads are taking such an interest in our judicial district this year, but you will not have to look far for an explanation. Heretofore they have had control of the supreme court and they did not care who sat on the district bench, for, if decisions did not go to suit them, they would be reversed in the supreme court. This year there was a revolt against their much pampered supreme court and Judge Sedgwick, their candidate in the republican primaries, was turned down and Judge Reese was nominated as an anti-railroad candidate on the democratic ticket. With two anti-railroad candidates in the field for supreme judge, they are driven to seek shelter in the district court. If they can get control of the district courts of the state they can surrender control of the supreme court, for their friends in the district court will protect them. They find their hold loosening on the supreme court and they are grasping at the lower courts.
