we are willing that everyone shall have a hearing.

Earlier in the campaign we pointed out the necessity for a change in the personnel of the county board. Personally, we know nothing of this road, but many of these men are republicans, and one of them is the republican committeeman for that precinct. It cannot possibly be that these men are publishing this for political effect. They are publishing it because they believe it best to have a change on the county board. They believe it better to put some new blood on the board. It is a fact that when you put a few men in charge of county business and they begin to let contracts to their friends, and appoint their personal friends to office, the public will become dissatisfied and think something is wrong, whether it is or not.

The best way to avoid graft and to retain public confidence is to give each party representation on the board. When each party is represented there will be more publicity and the public will know what is going on. There is no one running against Mr. Russell in the Second district, but in the Third district Mr. Mone is running against Mr. Bowring. Mr. Morris, the third member of the board was elected last year and has two years yet to serve. Mr. Russell and Mr. Morris will give the republicans a majority of the board. If Mr. Mone is elected it will give the democrats one representative, and we believe it will be better for the public and more satisfactory all around if the minority is given representation.

Remember the whole county votes on this office and no matter what precinct you are in you can vote for Mr. Mone.

President Roosevelt Takes a Hand in Our Judicial District

In this judicial district today there are a lot of machine politicians that are working with might and main to fool the voters. They are sending out a lot of campaign trash on the judicial situation and are making frantic appeals to the republican voters to support Douglas and Jenckes, on the plea that the party will be endangered if Judges Harrington and Westover are re-elected. They are attempting to show the honest republican voter that if he votes for Judge Harrington and Judge Westover he will be committing an act of treason, and, that it will be an act of disloyalty to President Roosevelt.

Let us see what President Roosevelt and his predecessor, President McKinley, have done in selecting federal judges, and federal prosecuting attorneys:

When William McKinley was president, elected as he was by the republican party, he appointed federal judges without regard to party affiliation. We do not say that he appointed as many democrats as republicans, but what we do say is, that he appointed several democrats to the federal bench. When he had a judge to appoint, it was the man's qualifications he considered, and when he found a democrat eminently fitted for the bench he never hesitated to appoint him. The mere fact that some republican lawyer was pleading for the place did not deter President McKinley from performing his duty and selecting a judge without regard for his party label.

Since Theodore Roosevelt has been president he has also selected democrats for high official positions. He has recognized the fact that some men are peculiarly fitted for judicial work and when he found such a man, although he happened to be a democrat, he has called him to the post. On more than one occasion he has appointed democrats to the most important positions. Did he do this because there were no republican lawyers seeking the appointments? Not at all. He did it because he believed the public service was first to be considered. He believed his first duty was to the public, and party was only a secondary consideration. Just to mention a few of his appointments: He appointed Judson Harmon, a democrat, who was attorney general under Cleveland, to investigate the charge of rebating against the railroads. This was five times as great a place as district judge, but the president was looking for the best material he could find, and it happened to be a democrat. He appointed James M. Beck of Philadelphia, a democrat of national prominence, as a special attorney general. When the land frauds in California and Nevada were exposed and the country was shocked at the revelations that were made, the president looked for a fearless and able lawyer to take charge of the government's interests. Did he select a republican? Did he say the prosecuting officer must be a republican? Not a bit of it! Himself and his attorney general talked the situation over. They had on hand hundreds of applications from republican lawyers. They had applications from men, eminent in their profession and distinguished for their party service, but they were passed over. They said we want a man that is especially fitted for this work and we don't care what ticket he votes, and they sent a telegram to Francis J. Heney of San Francisco, and asked him to accept the place. Francis J. Heney was, and is, one of the ablest and best known democrats in the U. S. He had opposed the election of President Roosevelt with all his power, but it was not for personal reasons—it was a matter of party difference only. Francis J. Heney accepted the place and he has come up to the president's expectations. He has justified the president in his selection, and even the most hide-bound partisan must admit that his selection was a wise one.

But just to come nearer home. When land frauds were discovered in Nebraska, Wyoming and Colorado, the president again found it necessary to appoint a special attorney general to take charge of the work. You might think that inasmuch as he had just appointed Heney, a democrat, he would now appoint a republican for the other place—surely his own party would get one of the places. Did he do it? Not at all! He had seen enough of Heney's work to satisfy him that that appointment was a good one. He had seen enough to convince him that in selecting men for these positions he must look to the man and not to the man's politics. He was again besieged by republicans eager for the place, but when the time came to act, he appointed Samuel R. Rush of Omaha, a well known democrat. Mr. Rush went into office two years ago, and within the last six months he has been promoted by the president.

Perhaps you think we have wandered from the subject and are wondering what these appointments have to do with the election of judges in this district. These appointments have just this to do with it: They take the wind out of the sails of the men who are appealing to you to vote against Judge Harrington and Judge Westover because they happen to be democrats. These appointments refute the argument of the men who appeal to you to sustain Roosevelt by voting for Douglas and Jenckes. These appointments show that President McKinley and President Roosevelt in filling judicial positions cared nothing for the judge's party affiliation, but they cared everything for his fitness for the job. These appointments show that if President Roosevelt was a voter in the Fifteenth judicial district today he would not cast his ballot for a district judge without taking into account his experience and qualifications. That he would first determine which of the candidates would render the most efficient service and he would then cast his vote accordingly. These appointments show that he would say to the professional politicians who are appealing to the voters of this district to vote for Douglas and Jenckes in order to sustain the party organization: "Does Mr. Douglas possess the qualifications for this place? Is his experience such that he will be able to give the public better service than Judge Harrington? Is his record as a public official such that we can afford to give up the judge who has been tried and true and now experiment with a new man?" He would answer some of these letters asking him to vote against Judge Westover and say: "Who is Mr. Jenckes? I have not heard of him before. Is Mr. Jenckes a better lawyer than Judge Westover? Has he had as much experience as Judge Westover? What has he done to show that he is able to take Judge Westover's place on the bench?"

When our friend found himself called on to answer these questions, he would begin to hedge and would admit that Judge Westover had a splendid record as a judge. That his decisions were eminently fair and just, but the party organization needs the place. What do you think Roosevelt would say to this kind of an answer to his questions? Why, he would just reach for the big stick and as our boss politician took to his heels, Roosevelt would shout after him: "Your answers have shown me that Judge Westover is the man for the place. It is my duty as an American citizen to cast my ballot for him and I am going to perform my duty, and what is best for me as a citizen will not hurt the party." Judged by his appointments, there can be no question that if President Roosevelt had a vote in this district this fall it would be cast for Judge Harrington and Judge Westover.
