| State House Hall A Trys= ting Place.  The hall of representatives at the state house has become a sort of lover's lane the only rariation in the traditional path for affectionate pedestrianism being that the seats in the gallery are so close together that walking is impeded and the billing and cooing couples sit themselves down in the rear seats and rehearse, with mighty good variation, probably, the story that was old when Helen's smile was the most precious thing in the world and when Ilion's towers were stained with new-laid mortar. The doors are open during the day, the hall is quiet and its faint echoes are seldom disturbed, solitude in allpathic doses is promised those who enter there - and hence the lovers. They come in the spring and in the summer and when the frosts of November have made the air crisp, while the sunstine still bears a warmth inside a window. The legislature occasionally usurps their places but when the legislature closes back come the lovers to assert their ancient rights in this unsuspected fane.  Last week a couple floated up the stairs to the third floor and continuing the drift sat themselves down in the gallery. They were from the country. Secure in the belief that no one knew them and more secure in their affection, they sat all unheeding, with their arms about each other and their faces pressed together, the sun light falling on their heads, making one halo above their united devotion, and, to them at least, lighting up the gloom of the hall like their affection gilded the dress of their own existence. To them no doubt the whole seance was horrible poetic but an enemy to the contented life, like an imp cast from a Venusian heaven and angered at his exile, broke in upon them.  It was the janitor.  He didn't exachly ireak in on | them either. He merely saw them. The tableau was fixed, he surmised So he hied himself to every office in the building where the wheel of industry were lagging and told (those who like to see the silence sign hung on the said wheels that there was something worth seeing at the end of the hall.  The girls went and the men went. They looked into the hall and gazed with suppressed merriment or sighing regret at the happy couple Girls who wished they were playing a part and men who rather envied the country visitor gazed. Girls who sighed at some old memory gazed. Men who remembered their courtship looked and smiled and gazed. And others turned back to the unplastered hall with a sturdy laugh. But the couple in the gallery seats did not know all this. They were perfectly happy and the affairs of the world didn't really bother them.  It is said that one couple became so attached to the gallery that they were found early one morning sitting on the iron steps waitng for the janitor to unlock the door that they might enter the trysting place and there carry out the loving dialogue with the proper accompaniment of soft lights, low music and quict spaciousness.  High school girls and important high sciool sophomores, university lads and co-eds, country visitors, all of them one time find the rendezvous and pay their devotion.  Those who seat themselves in the rear seats ate hidden from view until one has penetrated the gallery some distance. Those who sit near the rating are, of course, in easy view. It is proposed that a sliding handicap be arranged so that those who care not for public gaze may be rewarded. Springs are to be arranged under each row of seats so that engagement rings will be brought automatically to those who choose the rear seat and completely furnished houses with a comfortable income for life will be set automatically before | those who have progressed far enough in their mutual devotion to take a front seat and blazon their affection to a peeping world. -Lincoln Star.  Editor Howe of the Atchison Globe springs the following as a sample of a wedding notice ten years hence: "The bride looked very well in a traveling dress, but all eyes were centered on the groom. He wore a dark suit that fitted his form perfectly and in his daintly gloved hands he carried a small rose. His curly hair was beautifully done and a delicate odor of hair oil of the best quaility floated down the aisle as he passed. The young people will miss him, now that he is married. He is loved by all for his many accomplishments, his tender graces and his winning ways. The bride commands a good salary as a bookkeeper in St. Joe, and the groom will miss none of the luxuries to which he has been accustomed. A crowd of pretty young men saw him off at the depot."  A. O. Williams has commenced suit in the district court against the Neligh Register, claiming that his reputation was injured by that paper during the recent campaign. Arthur Mullen has been engaged by the editor and if Williams is not a sweet scented saint it is dollars to doughnuts that he will be sorry that he put his character and standing on exhibition. A country e litor may of en err in presenting a political issue and in setting forth the qualifications of candidates, but honestly and confidentially, dear reader, for every lie that an editor tells that may be construed as being deterimental to candidates, he tells five hundred lies in their favor. The good lies go by without a 'thank you' and for the bad lies chey try to put the editor in jail. Holt County Democrat. |
