Tarpeia, covetous of the gold bracelets worn by the Sabine soldiers, had told them she would open the gates of the citadel to them if they would give her what they wore upon their left arms. "Sure!" joyously answered the soldiers. "All rights reserved!"

It was not until they had rewarded her treachery by overwhelming her with their shields, which they also wore upon their left arms, that she tumbled.—Chicago Tribune.

In Extremis.

Late one night a clergyman was called out to minister to an old man—a worker upon the adjacent railway—who was supposed to be dying. The summons was brought by another old man, the elder brother of the stricken one. While he was bustling about, making preparations for departure, the clergyman forgot momentarily the social status of his visitor and asked, "Is he in extremis?"

The old man was not going to be beaten. "Aye, he's right in your reverence." After a pause, he added, as a clincher: "Clean in, poor chap. Right up to the neck, sir."—Cornhill Magazine.

The Great American Woman.
A French literary woman and sociologist studying the big cities of America tells us that our civilization will be the best the world has ever seen, because of the influence of the American woman on our educational system and our club life.

It is always pleasant to hear nice things about one's own, and the American man is more easily and surely flattered by praise of his wife and daughters than by any other method. Of course, we know that the American woman is the finest of her sex, but it is not every day that her European sister will admit it.

The European man has always known her superiority, and the number of American wives in European homes is proof of his good judgment. On the other hand, it is an encouraging sign of growing appreciation of the American man that a real, titled aristocrat from the old world has found the man of her heart in Baltimore.

Who knows but one of these days we shall have princesses and duchesses and all that sort of thing in our best society, keeping up the drawing room while the plain American husband produces the shekels to do the keeping? A vast amount of American money has gone to Europe with American brides, and it is no more than fair that a foreign title or two should come to this country to even up.

Earls and dukes bolster up their family fortunes with American wives and money, so why shouldn't European ladies of title take husbands from our great American nobility to maintain them in dignity suitable to their rank?

Mrs. Mary A. Lamont is a railroad switchwoman on the Boston and Albany, and receives all the railroad telegrams at her station besides doing the switching.

Mrs. Hughes is the "master of the hounds" at Neuaddfawr, Wales, and is such an expert rider that she swims her horse across stream while others following the hounds think it more expedient to go around by the bridge.

Miss Edith Somerville, of West Carbery, in Ireland, is master of fox hounds.

Mrs. Donald C. Monroe is the only woman in the United States who is a professional cartoonist, being known in New York by her maiden name of Laura E. Foster.

Dr. S. Josephine Baker, of the Health Department of New York City, and Dr. Annie Williams, of the Bacteriological Department, are both experts.

Who Supports the Wife?
Rev. Anna Howard Shaw and Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman had a debate the other day in New York, the question being, "Do husbands support their wives?" Rev. Anna Shaw said that they do not, but that in this semi-civilized country in thirty-eight of the States the title to the children rests, not in the mother, but in the father. Women cannot legally possess their own children nor own their clothes. The more work a woman does the less her husband gives her. Mrs. Gilman said that if a stenographer earning $25 a week married an invalid and he stayed home and did the work while she made the money, people would say she supported him, and logically the wife doing the same thing was supported. The audience, however, voted in favor of the proposition of Dr. Shaw.

Children and Neatness.
A waste paper basket should form part of every nursery equipment. Children should be taught to put into it all scraps of paper, cuttings from dolls' dressmaking and any other little odds and ends that would otherwise litter the nursery floor.

It will teach them an excellent lesson in tidiness and be good training, especially for the girls, for the day when each will have a home of her own.

While children are young it is comparatively easy to teach them to be tidy, but the lesson is hard to learn in later life.

He Doesn't Know Her.
The girl who pulls roses to pieces as she talks is the creation of men novelists who do not share the feminine love of flowers. They might as well represent her as "idly pinching the baby as she spoke." Marguerite and her daisy are true to life; most women would pull anything on earth to pieces to know if the right man loves them; but they need the motive.

She regards her election as "an almost historic event, for it is something to be proud of to be the first woman in France to hold such a position."—Boston Herald.

Less Sentimental Fiction.
Anyone who follows the development of modern fiction will have noticed the general decline of love-interest, says the Book Monthly. Life has not only become less leisurely, but also more scientific and more serious. Love scenes are not only cut down, they have been transferred from the drawing room to the motor car or the aeroplane, and the new setting demands a certain seriousness.

Practice Proved Theory.
So many women have been willing to become school directors at Philadelphia, and those who have had an opportunity have done such good work, that the cause of woman suffrage has gained more, Philadelphia says, than many years of preaching and teaching would have accomplished.

Put a piece of white soap in wide bottle, fill with warm water and let stand till ready to wash the hair, then fill up again and let stand till next time and the "jelly" is always ready.

Red Hair and Consumption.
A German physician declares that red-haired persons are more susceptible to consumption than dark-haired people. Some other types, like Scandinavians, who, as a rule, are blonde, when transplanted from the healthy agricultural sections of their native country to the congested districts of large cities, offer less resistance to consumption than do native born citizens. Many blondes, however, have remarkable powers of resistance against consumption, while many brunettes offer relatively little resisting power. This, he says, is due to racial susceptibility and change in environment.

Educating the Men.
In the United States, where women are probably freer than in any other part of the world, the divorce records show that they are the accusers in three-fourths of the suits filed. This means, of course, that women are demanding a higher standard of living and that they will recognize only one standard of morality for both sexes. Men may rebel, but they will have to come to it finally if they hope to live happy ever after.

CONGRESS TO AID FARMERS.
Forty-six Nations and Colonies Meet at Rome to Improve Conditions.

Forty-six powers of the old and new world recently ended at Rome, Italy, the first session of the International Institute of Agriculture.

The King of Italy built the palace for the institute, and endowed it with an income derived from the rents of one of his private estates, and within its walls from time to time in the future the nations of the world will gather to exchange thought, statistics and inventions for their mutual benefit. While the good aimed at is the good of all the people of all the countries, those who till the soil will be the earliest beneficiaries. To aid them in harvesting larger crops, to help them to wider markets, to guard them from the evil effects of the speculative exchange, where prices are manipulated without regard to the man whose sweat has been spent on the soil, will be a few of the objects sought by the institute. The fact that forty-six governments have put their shoulders to the wheel of the project promises well for its success.

The first the world knew of the work was when it was learned that King Victor Emmanuel had become an enthusiast on agriculture and had written a letter to his cousin, Giovanni Giolitti, president of the Council of Ministers at Rome, outlining the project of the institute. In consequence of the King's letter an invitation was sent out to the principal governments of the world asking them to send representatives to a preliminary meeting in Rome during May and June, 1905.

At the preliminary conference the scheme of the work was divided into three branches, or bureaus. The first was to be that in control of the clerical and financial details; the second to have charge of the general statistics and agricultural information, and the third of information relating to economic and social institutions. Under the last named are included the subjects of wages of farm labor and information concerning the agencies of co-operation, insurance and agricultural credit. The second bureau, however, is by far the most important in its scope, as it has charge of the chief subjects for which the institute was organized—agricultural statistics, including everything connected with animal and vegetable production and distribution, prices and wages, and the diseases and pests of plants and their remedies.

The expenses of the institute, except its home, which was given by the King of Italy, are borne by the various countries represented, the amount of assessment being pro rated according to the number of votes each government has in the conventions. The countries are divided into five classes, those of the first class, of which the United States is one, being entitled to five votes. Nearly all the other kingdoms, republics, principalities and colonies of the civilized world are in the fourth and fifth categories, with one or two votes apiece.

Under the workers' insurance laws there were on the average about 40,000 workers insured in Stuttgart, Germany, in the year 1907. This number fell, in consequence of the depression, to 35,000 in 1908.

The several crafts of steam engineers in Boston, Mass., number more than 4,000, and, despite the hard times, the engineers' local have grown stronger and in greater proportions than any craft in New England.

With a view of consolidating the labor movement in the boot trade, the English National Union of Boot and Shoe Makers has recently been taking a ballot of its members on the question of whether they should join the National Union of Boot and Shoe Operatives, and the proposition has been carried by 123 to 1.

The Dominion government has issued orders for a flat increase of $150 or about $3 a week to the civil servants of every department, on the permanent staff of the inside service.

Building trades unions in Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn., are making efforts to obtain wage scales and working rules which will guarantee the same conditions in both cities.

At a meeting of the sliding scale committee in the iron and steel trade, held at Abergevenny, Wales, it was decided that prices justified a reduction of 5 1/2 p cent.

Her Mamma.
In the Bohemian set of Chicago two of the popular members are a well-known writer and his wife, who has also written several books. They have a daughter about 4 years old. Recently the little girl was visiting at the home of a friend and her small playmate asked her, "Can your mamma sew?"

The daughter of the literary pair evidently was a bit chagrined. She could not remember that she ever had seen her mamma sew. She is a truthful child and would not claim any advantage she was not sure of, yet she felt mamma's honor was at stake.

"I don't know if mamma can sew," she replied, dubiously, "but she can smoke a cigarette."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. The Weather House.
A very ingenious contrivance for foretelling the weather is the old fashioned "weather house," largely made in Switzerland. It is arranged in such a way that two figures act in response to the twisting of a piece of cogit The material, supported by a wire, controls the movements of a little platform, on either end of which is placed a model. Excessive moisture in the air causes the cogit to twist and turn the platform round, so that the man emerges from one of the doors in the front of the house. Reverse condition of the atmosphere bring about the contraction of the cogit, and the platform swings back, thus bringing the figure of the woman into prominence at her particular door. The making of a weather house is quite an easy matter.

Men are unappreciative of efforts of their wives to look beautiful. During the recent absence of an Atchison man his wife put up her hair in curl papers every night, and washed her gray hairs in a new kind of tea women have discovered. She supposed that when her husband returned home he would remark her improved appearance. But he didn't! And his wife is still putting in.—Atchison Globe.
