The Women and the Vote.

"Pantaloons gowns next—now say we can't vote," remarked Mme Qui Vive in last Sunday's Record-Herald. "It is a great laugh. It's a r-r-r-roar. It's a volcanic he-haw. 'Squse us, gentlemen, while we smile. We have worn your neckties and your half hose, we have taken your hat in the past, we have purloined your cuff-links and your scarf pins. But, 'tis not enough—we are about to take possession of your Sunday pantaloons and neatly remodel them into skirts, the which shall be known in fashionable society as pantaloons gowns. Now, say we can not vote." No dear Mme Qui Vive, such things will never make men of you nor give you the right to vote." Before that glad day shall come, women must give up corsets, rouse French heels, coiffures, and the ever weaning desire to have their costumes described in the society column after every function that they attend.

Many vital things lie between you and a vote.—Ainsworth Star Journal.

The Democratic Duty.

Editor Mark Murry of the Pender Times compresses a big argument into a few words when he says: "If the senators of the United States represent correctly principles of the two great political parties of this country I don't know whether I am a democrat or not. To observe their antics one cannot help wishing that W. J. Bryan were down there to eliminate a few of the kinks that are so prominent and nauseating. Never ought the election of senators by a direct vote of the people appeal so to the voters as now."

The senators do not represent the principles of their party. Especially are a number of the "democratic" senators misrepresentative of the democratic party.

When the lumber schedule came before the senate, for example, there were only ten real democrats there to vote for free lumber, which was a specific pledge of the Denver platform. The senators, calling themselves democrats, who voted against free lumber, betrayed their party. So did those who voted with the steel trust on iron ore, and with the sugar trust on sugar, to mention some other instances.

If there is such a thing as a democratic party then it must have the power and the willingness to enforce party discipline against its servants who are false to it. This is just now the first and greatest duty confronting the democracy. The party scourge, the fearless excommunications of the party leaders and of the party press, the adverse votes of the rank and file, should fall squarely upon the democratic senators and the democratic representatives who have proved themselves traitors to party principle and repudiators of party pledges.

Meanwhile the democratic policy of a popular election of senators should be vigorously pushed. Why are there "democratic" senators who vote as republicans; who vote with the very interests on which their party is waging war? Some few of them, perhaps, are where they are because they succeeded in fooling the democratic rank and file. But more of them are there because they were elected by legislatures which were dominated by railroad and oil and sugar and steel interests. They owe their election more to those interests than to the democratic voters—and they remember their creator.

It cannot too often be repeated that there is no room in this country and no need for two republican parties. There must be one party to oppose it uncompromisingly, fearlessly, eternally. That is the province of the democratic party. All its principles, every

And that is why it is now the duty of the democratic party to arm itself with a scourge of scorpions and drive from the temple the money-changers who are disgracing and betraying it.—World-Herald.

While The State Journal has been one of the leading papers of the state for nearly forty years, yet its most rapid growth has been recently, during which time it has come to be recognized by many as Nebraska's greatest paper, making most of those things that interest Nebraskans most, in this way creating a place for itself in the daily life of thousands of Nebraska homes. The country press generally could be quoted as saying that the editorial page of The Journal is exceptionally strong and fearlessly independent. It is also unusually bright, Bixby himself being a gem. No writer in Nebraska ever had the warm admiration of so many people as Bixby. His column in The Journal is alone worth the price of the paper. His wholesome philosophy will put sunshine and cheer into the most chronic grouch. The state university, the state house and all the other public institutions at Lincoln make the Journal peculiarly a paper for state people. It is clean, excluding all liquor and improper medical advertising. Its sporting department is clever and there with the goods. More money is spent for state telegraphic news than by other state dailies. If you want to know what is happening in Nebraska, as well as the whole world, The Lincoln Journal is the paper for you. Why not give it this trial subscription?
