The Way of the Transgressor.

We print the following article in full this week from the Anaconda Standard as reprinted in The Saint's Herald. We told the story in part last week and some friends thought some reflection was cast on the church of Latter Day Saints and wish it understood that there is a distinct difference between the Brighamites and the present Latter Day Saints. The Lee family were formerly residents of Cherry County living out on the Bordman near Chesterfield. Manny Cherry County people knew them here but we never heard them spoken of excepting as worthy citizens here though we heard little of them at all.

We are reminded of the truthfulness of the trite saying. "The way of a transgressor is hard," by the receipt of a copy of the Anaconda Standard for October 14, from which we quote the following dispatch:

Helena, Montana, October 13.—Assistant District Attorney C. S. Ford returned from Thompson Falls and Polson, where he represented the Government at preliminary hearings of persons charged with crime. At Thompson Falls the hearing was held of an alleged gang of counterfeiters. This case promises to become one of the most interesting tried in Helena in recent years.

The defendants are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Smith Lee and John Smith Lee, jr. They were bound over and young Lee and his mother will be brought here tomorrow. Lee, sr., is now in the county jail. A second son, Henry Lee, was apprehended in Idaho on the charge of passing counterfeit coin, and it is said he will plead guilty when his case is called at Moscow, Idaho.

Secret service operatives of the treasury department, who were called into the case after the arrest had been made, pronounced the coins found in the possession of the Lees the best imitations of the real thing they ever saw.

Suspicion was first attracted to the Lee family after Henry Lee had been arrested at Sand Point, Idaho, for passing a worthless ten dollar gold piece. He refused to talk, but papers in his pockets furnished a clue as to where he hailed from.

Officers then visited the works of the Burnt Forest Silver and Copper Mining Company, the Lee property, situated about six miles from Trout Creek. Joseph Smith Lee was there, and when John Tissue, deputy sheriff of Sanders County, rapped, there was a rattling of locks and doors and then Lee demanded who was without and what was wanted. "I'm cold, I want to get in and get warm," replied Tissue, giving a false name. The door was slowly opened and Lee appeared, holding in his hand a big six-shooter. The visitor started back with feigned surprise and then entered in response to Lee's invitation. The door was closed and the other officers slipped up. While Lee was building a fire, they entered and when he swung around, he looked down the muzzles of a circle of six-shooters.

The completeness of the mine and of the counterfeiting plant surprised the officers. A fine tunnel ran into the hill a distance of two hundred feet. There were cabins, blacksmith shops, blowers and all other machinery required in the operation of a mine. Another surprising thing was the arsenal. There were three beds in the Lee house and in each was found a rifle, shotgun, or revolver. In every room was found a weapon of some sort, so that at a single step a firearm could be picked up if needed. Plaster of paris, rabbit metal, crucibles, and gasoline furnaces were found, as well as a number of finished coins.

The arrest of the Lee family was a great surprise to the people of the vicinity. The family had lived in Sanders County four or five years and had borne an excellent reputation. Only about two weeks prior to his arrest Lee, sr., delivered a funeral sermon.

The senior Lee is seventy-one years old, but is mentally and physically alert and agile. He is the same Joseph Smith Lee, it is declared, who was one of the band of "destroying angels" who swooped down upon and killed the emigrants in Utah at the Mountain Meadow massacre, many years ago, and who was left for dead in a hog pen.

John Smith Lee, jr., the son, is a jeweler by trade, a fact which the officers say accounts for the clever workmanship shown by coins. The Lees were supposed to be developing the Burnt Mountain mine, and it is said they sold considerable stock in the concern.

We insert this item of news for the reason that for a number of years Joseph Smith Lee, who came to the Reorganization from Utah, was an elder of the church and preached to some extent west of the Missouri River and in Utah; but becoming impatient under restraint made disturbance in one or two of the Nebraska branches of the church, and under the administration of Elder James Caffall, minister in charge, was disfellowshipped. He sought to create a division, evidently believing that the position assumed by him was a correct one, but which failed to impress any particular number of the Saints, and his efforts failed. We had lost track of the man for quite a number of years now, and greatly regret his coming to light in such unfortunate and unenviable circumstances.

Truly the way of the transgressor is precarious and detection seems to lurk upon every side of him. We greatly regret the departure of this man from right ways, both because of the name which he bears, and because of former associations with him.
