At the opening strains of Lohengren wedding march played by the Rev. Wells of Valentine, the couple took their position on the front porch upon a Navajo blanket, surrounded by a picturesque group of relatives and friends of the contracting parties.

Just after the ceremony the bride and groom stepped inside the parlor, which was beautifully decorated in white and pink festoons, draped from a large wedding bell in the center to the corners of the room, under which they took their position, and, during the playing of Mendelssohn's wedding march, received the congratulations of their guests.

The bride was beautifully attired in white satin with veil and orange flowers and carried a beautiful bouquet of cut flowers. The couple were attended by William Morrissey as best man and Miss Julia Conroy as bridesmaid.

The couple were then ushered into the dining room, seating 24 persons or more, until near three hundred guests were served with a bountiful wedding supper which reflected great credit upon the host and hostess.

Carriages were in waiting at Kilgore to convey the guests arriving on the train from and returning to the station. Also two auto loads went up from Valentine in the afternoon.

Many beautiful and valuable presents were bestowed as tokens of the friendship and esteem of the invited guests. The evening was spent in joyous conversation among the older guests and dancing among the young people.
