Charles Cotterman is Made Director General of Posts in Philippines—Was Assistant Under Widaman.

Charles M. Cotterman, who served here as deputy postmaster when W. H. Widaman was in charge of Uncle Sam's Norfolk business, has been promptly recognized as an efficient employe and is now in the top ranks of employes of the department.

He was a very popular clerk here, well liked by patrons of the office and there were few who doubted his ability to advance in the work should his efforts be directed toward promotion.

He advanced to railway mail clerk between Omaha and Ogden, Utah; was chief clerk of the Ogden division and was finally advanced to superintendent of mail clerks at Portland, Oregon.

Soon after the United States assumed authority over the Philippine islands he went there to accept a position under the director of the posts.

That officer recently resigned and Mr. Cotterman has been appointed to the position, being now director general of posts in the Philippines.

Mr. Cotterman's Norfolk friends are well pleased that he has been thus honored and will unite in congratulating him on the position he has attained, fully confident that he is but receiving a just reward for faithful and conscientious performance of duty.
