CHAPTER XXIX.

"Twelve men on their legs," said the boatswain, waving his hook toward the huts, "an that counts in the old man an Tinker Tom, which is both crippled."

"Credit where credit is due, Master Topp," replied the boatswain. "All praise to your surging. But for you an the old man an nevy Job, which, though little better than natural in general, has unstowed a few grains o' sense for this time o' need, I don't say but we should have lost a hand or two more. But as it is we got 12, an what I say is 12 men bairn't able to take the Scourge to England."

"It could be done," interposed Alec in a half musing tone, "if we could keep off the scurvy."

"But you can't," replied the boatswain gruffly. "Might as well try to escape fleas in a London tavern as scurvy on a long ocean voyage, an newly healed men is particular liable to it. Mark me, Captain Ireland, if the Scourge sails from here with none but us 12 aboard her she'll never work up Bristol river."

"But with the men Saul Dickory tells of," said I, "we could do it."

"Could we get them?" inquired Alec, turning to the man.

"Why, yes, captain, an easy. Los Roques is the name o' the islands they're on, an you'll find that down in your charts. The chap as told me was a half breed that got blowed off there in a fishing cruise."

"How did they get there?"

"Well, you see, they're a scratch lot—English, Frenchers an Danes—that kramled together at the mines to escape. They gets out, reaches the coast, seizes a boat an puts to sea. They meant to reach one o' the islands an live there till they could steal a ship that would carry them home, but the boat was knocked to splinters in the surf on landing, an having no tools to build another they found themselves safely jailed."

"See, Alec," said I, unrolling a chart and spreading it on the ground. "Give me a crew of six, and I'll take the Scourge round, leaving you others here. By keeping plenty of northing we shall be out of the usual track and can be back here in ten days without sighting a sail."

"But no—Alec would not hear it. If we went at all, it should be with all hands aboard, and himself in command. And finally, after much discussion, this was what we decided to do. Further, it was resolved to leave the treasure on Cave Island for the present. The repairs to the Scourge were soon finished, and the earliest possible day was fixed for the embarking."

But at the last moment an unexpected difficulty arose. The old man refused absolutely to quit the island. He had been ailing of late, and it seemed that he had never quite recovered from the wound he got in the battle with the galleon. His wits were queerer than usual, and he continually complained of the cold, though the hot summer sun drew streams of sweat from the rest of us.

We all felt great concern for the old man, and though we knew he would never play us false, but would defend our treasure even with magic arts if need be, still we did not like to leave him behind, ailing as he was. But none of us dared to gainsay his wish except our captain. Fully an hour did Alec spend in useless argument trying to turn him from his purpose and seemed all the time to be strangely moved, though from what cause we could not tell. But he failed. And when at last the Scourge set sail and the old man was left on the beach my sworn shipmate covered him with his eyes till we had rounded the spit and run out of sight. Then with a heavy sigh he turned and went down to the cabin.

It was a strange affair, and perhaps we should have taken it as an omen of ill luck. Though I am myself singularly free from superstitions of all kinds, I must believe that the old man had some foreknowledge of misfortune to come, and yet I cannot think that he knew that the fire would break out in the Scourge's spirit room or surely he would have warned us. But perhaps, as Willie Treballon says, the seer can see, but cannot change, the decrees of fate. It may be so.

That, however, is neither here nor there. But the fact remains that a fire did break out, and that, too, on the second day out from Cave Island during the first watch of the glass while Alec held the deck.

I was in my bunk, but came up when the alarm was given and was soon passing buckets with the rest. But the dainty Scourge was doomed, and our puny efforts were without avail. The water seemed only to irritate the blaze to further fury, and where at first was pale, lambent flame, blue and transparent, soon there began to roll forth an avalanche of inky smoke, riven by greedy, shooting tongues of yellow fire. Like furies we worked in the stinging reek, and like a mocking fiend our enemy grew in power and height. Inch by inch we were driven toward the stern, fighting desperately every step of the way. Spaniard was never so renitent a foe as this one, which swallowed our watery missiles as fast as we hurled them and turned them to hissing steam that bit back at the sender.

Panting and scorched, we gathered, a smoke grimed group, on the counter and realized that we were beaten. A shout arose that the powder room was on fire, and a half charred boat was dropped into the water. Springing in, we pushed off.

Scarcely had we pulled a cable's length away when the Scourge blew up. Masts, spars and deck shot up toward heaven and then fell in a blazing shower around the column of smoke which marked the place where the shattered hull had sunk.

The rest of the night dragged itself wearily through, and the sun rose upon an unsteeked sky. The boat was without stores or provisions of any kind. She had neither compass nor sail, and with one pair of oars we could make little headway through the calm, even had we known where to steer for.

Which of us did not envy the old man in his beautiful island hermitage then?

We looked around at the unbroken circle of the horizon, with the water it encircled untroubled by a single zephyr and gleaming like a glancing mirror of light, then at the cruel sun that was arching a course of scorching splendor through the cloudless vault above, and as we looked we took but little comfort from the cheering words which Alec spoke to us. What help could reach us from such a barren fiery wilderness? What oasis could we hope to find in such a broiling, trackless desert?

But in spite of the enervating heat we tugged doggedly at the oars. The work, purposeless as it seemed, was some relief. To active men there is no torture like indolence in a case like this, for indolence is the advance picket of despair.

But each couple, though eager for their turn of toil, were glad enough to quit it at the appointed time. Water driven from the body in perspiration makes its want more keenly felt within. The burning thirst was aggravated by exercise. Alec, being sparely built, perhaps suffered least. I, a thirsty soul, ever given to quaffing what was offered, endured ten men's agony. Indeed, as evening drew near, I began to fear that before another watch had run out madness or death must be the end of me.

My time, however, was not yet come. As the sun went down in the west its dying glory lit upon a sail that peeped above the southern water line. With frenzied effort we made for it and feared that the darkness would come down before we could reach it.

As we drew nearer we made out that she was a carrack. The breeze which brought her up had lagged behind, and she had run into a belt of calm. Relaxing our efforts on one whiff, we rushed fiercely on, urging the boat with Titan strokes; for we were no gaunt famine worn specters, no starvelings of the ocean who had been eking out a day's pittance to make it last over ten. In bodily health we were all hale and hearty and as good men as we were the day before, save for the mad thirst which consumed us. But that is a madness beside which all other emotions sink to nothing; passion and prudence alike die when the thirst rage touches them. Urged by it we would have charged an army or have fled from one man, and so double banking our oars we tore toward the carrack.

That she was Spanish from truck to tiller mattered nothing. Her people clustered on the decks in armed suits. "That she was Spanish from truck to tiller mattered nothing. Her people clustered on the decks in armed suits. "That she was Spanish from truck to tiller mattered nothing. Her people clustered on the decks in armed suits."

"Our old enemy's turn had come again. Water! Agua!" we cried at them hoarsely. We cared for nothing else.

We climbed on board, and the Spaniards staid their hands, some because they feared to provoke desperate men, some through pity and others perhaps because they knew that when our burning throats were cooled we must fight at discretion. Regardless of the hostile crowd we rushed to the scuttle butt. Parched, faint, panting, we deemed the tepid water a nectar fit for the gods and the green slime, whose tendrils clung to the dipper, the sweetest essence man's palate could be tickled with. We drank and we drank and forgot in the satisfaction of the moment that the world held other evil things besides thirst.

But there was one at hand who would remind us. A tall, handsome Spaniard came forward from the crowd and stood before us. He saw what we had suffered, and he was pleased. And when those handsome lips parted in a smile a double row of cruel, yellow teeth shone out between them.

Our old enemy's turn had come again. We were the prisoners of Don Miguel del Cassamoro.

Rheumatism

Rheumatism is due to an excess of acid in the blood. When this escapes through the pores of the skin, as it often does, it produces some form of skin eruption—some itching disease like Eczema or Tetter—but when these little tubes or sweat glands are suddenly closed by exposure to cold and sudden chilling of the body, then the poisons thrown off by the blood, finding no outlet, settle in membranes, muscles, tissues and nerves. These parts become greatly inflamed, feverish and hot; dagger-like, maddening pains follow in quick succession, the muscles become extremely tender, the nerves break down and the sufferer is soon reduced to a state of helplessness and misery. This acid poison penetrates the joints and seems to dry out the natural oils, and the legs, arms and fingers become so stiff and sore that every movement is attended with excruciating pains.

"Three years ago I had a severe attack of la grippe, which left me almost a physical wreck. To add to my wretched condition, a severe form of Rheumatism developed. I tried all the physicians in our city, but none of them could do me any permanent good. I used all the rheumatic cures I could hear of, but received no benefit. After beginning S. S. S. I was relieved of the pain and have gained in flesh and strength and my general health is better than for years. I consider S. S. S. the grandest blood medicine in the world, and heartily recommend it to any one seeking relief from the tortures of Rheumatism. B. F. GREGORY, Union, S. C."

S. S. S. cures Rheumatism by working a complete change in the blood; the acids are neutralized, the circulation purified and the rich, healthy blood that is carried to the irritated, aching muscles and joints, soothes and heals them. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism even when inherited or brought on by the excessive use of mercury. Opium, in some form, is the basis of nearly all so-called Rheumatic Cures, which leaden the pain but do not touch the disease and lead to ruinous habits. Alkalies and the potash and mineral remedies so often prescribed, affect the tender lining of the stomach and weaken the digestion, thus adding another burden to the already weak and impoverished blood. S. S. S. contains no mineral or dangerous drug of any kind, but is a simple, vegetable remedy and the most perfect blood purifier known. Send for our book on Rheumatism and write our physicians if you wish any information or advice. We would be glad to mail you a book free; if charge nothing whatever for medical advice.
