Anyway C. E. Fields of Omaha attained to a little notoriety in his efforts to swing the "saloon vote" to Judge Hollenbeck.

How Mr. Havemeyer would make us scratch for sugar if he had a mortal cinch—but he will never get it. The American sugar interests are bound to be respected and strongly established.

Senator Dietrich is quoted largely by western papers and his views on all public questions are based upon good sound business judgement. It is probable that many have under-estimated the value Mr. Dietrich will be to his home state.

Not long ago we heard a young lady sing a familiar hymn, and this is exactly the pronunciation she gave its sacred words: "Ond I shall see Him face to face." And there seems to be no legal recourse. It seems that you can't keep idiotic fads out of music any more than out of other departments of instruction. Man was born to trouble, and he gets it at every turn of the road.—Bixby in the State Journal.

The Nebraska branch of the McKinley memorial fund committee have completed arrangements for raising Nebraska's share of the money and they will probably have no difficulty whatever in doing so. Subscriptions will be solicited from everybody, but no sum over $25 will be received. Postmasters, teachers and editors are to be asked to assist in raising the money and it is to be hoped that it will be a popular tribute to the murdered president. They hope that the contributions will be many, though small.

The Boers are confidently expecting some favorable terms from the British that will result in the war being ended. It would seem that England could afford to treat with the people opposing them. Not only is the war proving expensive, but popular feeling is that the desperate stand of the Boers is justifiable and no war ever engaged in by England has occasioned more criticism of that country and its methods. England can probably win out if it is desired, but it will undoubtedly prove the most disastrous victory she has ever won and her friends' best advice would be that the English government should come to terms.

A Swedish woman is conducting in England an institution for girls which is said to be like no other school in the world. During the course of two years the girls wear rational woolen costumes, without corsets or hats. They have an abundance of hygienic food, sleep between 9 in the evening until 6 in the morning, and spend practically all of the rest of the time in exercising and in playing games in the open air. It is said that wonderful results in building up strong constitutions have been achieved in this modern "health factory." The girls study hygiene and anatomy and a few things like that, but all of the nerve straining studies of a regular college course are discarded. The theory of the course is that health makes for happiness more than any accomplishment that may be secured at an ordinary school. The idea is certainly worthy of imitation on this side of the water.—State Journal.
