

JIM

By CECILY ALLEN

Copyright, 1901, by A. S. Richardson

The landlady was fair after a negative fashion, fat in a positive way and forty, decidedly so. She presided over the culinary department of 174 Otis street in a manner so capable that her boarders regarded her in the light of a genius and spoke with scorn of bachelor apartments and furnished flats. Her name is irrelevant and immaterial.

Her daughter was fair positively, fat negatively and at least twenty years on the right side of forty. She presided with admirable tact over the long table in the dining room, dispensing the culinary triumphs of her mother. Her name was Kathleen.

Dangler, who held a post in the M. R. and A. freight offices and went in for athletics, was in love with Kathleen and invested in a tandem on the installment plan. Seward, floorwalker in the silk department of "The Fair," had a similar cardiac affliction and showered the object of his affection with the latest editions from the book department, purchased at the customary discount allowed clerks at "The Fair."

The situation was rapidly becoming tense, and betting on the outcome among the remainder and less interested quota of boarders was about even when Jim appeared on the scene. He arrived in the dining room one night, dozing in Dangler's arms.

"Miss Kathleen," remarked the athletic young man in his most confident tone, "I know you won't turn this poor doggie out to graze on concrete and asphalt. I came up with him wandering disconsolately in the freightyards. I'll wager he's somebody's pet. He's so sick and well fed. His owner will probably turn up in the 'Lost and Found' column tomorrow."

Miss Kathleen promptly relieved Dangler of his burden and petted the impassive animal as only a woman can. This plainly annoyed Seward, and as Dangler rushed off to prepare for dinner his rival glared unreasonably at his unoffending soup plate.

But it was the little woman who taught a sewing class at the settlement, read Thomas a Kempis and abhorred Sunday newspapers who discovered the ad. in the Evening Herald. LOST—A pug dog, answering to the name of Jim; fat and slightly asthmatic; finder treat him kindly, as he is an old family pet; liberal reward. Marsden, 1201 Green street. Telephone 786-A.

As she finished reading seventeen voices simultaneously exclaimed "Jim!" and the pug, now comfortably ensconced on the ruffie of Kathleen's gown, uncurled himself, licked his chops suggestively and wheezed asthmatically.

Dangler shot a triumphant look at Seward and remarked: "I tell you what, Miss Kathleen—I'll telephone old Marsden right after dinner, and when he comes after the pup you claim the reward. Marsden's rich, and it ought to be worth a couple pounds of candy anyhow."

Half an hour later Dangler returned from the telephone booth in triumph. Most of the boarders were either in the parlor or chatting in the dim entry. "Say, folks, maybe you think the old gentleman wasn't tickled! Said he couldn't come down tonight and wouldn't trust one of the servants, so would we keep Jim till tomorrow morning. He'll surely be here by 10. And, by the way, Miss Kathleen, he says the pup's getting old, and if he doesn't have a pillow to sleep on he'll—he'll snore. And he can't eat meat unless it's cut very fine."

Kathleen, with visions of candy dancing before her pretty eyes, carried Jim off to the kitchen and personally prepared a delectable supper for the weary canine, after which the antidote for snoring was speedily produced.

That was Saturday night. It was remarkable how prompt the boarders all were for Sunday morning breakfast. Seward, who seldom appeared until noon, was first at the table, calm, cool and pale, in a satin quilted smoking jacket. Miss Ainsley, the lady reporter, who worked until a heathenish hour each Saturday night, was next. In fact, every one seemed on tiptoe with curiosity, though Jim and the reward were never mentioned during the breakfast hour.

It was singular, too, how the boarders, who usually spent Sunday morning in their rooms, lingered in the parlor. Seward, holding the morning paper at a most peculiar angle, held the point of vantage in the bay window. The little woman who went in for settlement work clasped her prayer book nervously and wondered if "he" would come before time for her to start for church. Dangler got no further in his preparations for his usual morning spin a wheel than to don his snowy white sweater with glowing crimson bands. Conversation languished.

Suddenly Seward dropped the paper and exclaimed: "Here he comes!"

The moment was tense with excitement. The bell pealed shrilly, and Kathleen cried nervously: "Oh, dear! Who's going to talk to him? I can't!"

Dangler looked uncomfortable. Then he caught the eye of the lady reporter. He smiled in relief.

"You'll do it, won't you, Miss Ainsley? You reporters have all kinds of nerve. You'll know just how to tackle the old gentleman."

trast Marsden entered. He laid his carefully polished hat on the table, crossed his cane on his gloves and gazed inquiringly about the room. He recognized Miss Ainsley and his dog simultaneously.

"Oh, Miss Ainsley, this is an unexpected pleasure! And there's Jim! You old rogue, what do you mean by running off like this, sir? A young man! Very kind of him, I'm sure. Perhaps you'll be kind enough to give him this, and this to the landlady who fed him. I trust he had the pillow. Thanks! Good morning!"

Owner and dog retired in good order, but Miss Ainsley never moved. Her face wore a pained expression. Finally she opened her hand very slowly, and, resting on the palm, the assembled company saw a dull half dollar and a shining new quarter. The silence which followed was eloquent of various sentiments. Seward was the first to recover. A sardonic smile crept across his pale, slender countenance.

"Treat him kindly. A family pet. Give him a pillow."

Then he burst into heartless laughter. The athletic figure of Dangler shook with ill suppressed fury. He said something between his teeth which reads like this:

"—I—I—Slaz!"

She of the settlement work actually smiled on him as though he had voiced her sentiments. "Who gets this reward?" inquired Miss Ainsley in a cuttingly clear voice. Kathleen glanced from the flushed face of Dangler to the severe countenance of her mother. The landlady looked as though she had just burned a batch of lemon pies. The situation was saved by the sudden appearance of Buttons with Dangler's belated laundry package.

"Here, Buttons," said Miss Ainsley with a cordial smile, "you can have the wildest sort of time on this." She slipped the coins in Buttons' unresisting hand. "And no one else seems to care particularly about it."

If the incident had been closed at this instant, it would have been better, but three evenings later the entire household was on the qui vive over a mysterious package which had arrived by special messenger during the afternoon. It was addressed in a large, flowing hand, "To the young man who found Jim." The conclusion was obvious. The owner of Jim had realized his base ingratitude and had repented to the tune of a handsome remembrance.

Dangler was distressingly late, and many of the boarders were toying with their coffee when he arrived. The demand that he open the package was unanimous. Blushingly he consented. The strings were snipped, the paper fell back and before the astonished eyes of the boarders rose a dog's muzzle and a certain wire contrivance indispensable to that federal officeholder known as a dog catcher.

The boarders individually and collectively stood willing to wager that Seward had perpetrated this unfeeling joke. But the sphinxlike countenance above the immaculate cream colored four-in-hand was neither paler nor more flushed than usual. Sympathy unuttered, but nevertheless strong, was felt for the unfortunate Dangler.

But, after all, perhaps it was misplaced. Women, especially in affairs of the heart, view events from a peculiar and unexpected standpoint. The landlady announced Kathleen's engagement to Dangler two Sundays later at dinner. The champagne which followed the announcement was generally supposed to be the outward and visible sign of the exuberant happiness of Dangler, and no one marred the occasion by unfeeling reminiscences.

Baring Feet at Worship.
The India Hindus and Mussulmans alike wear both sandals and shoes (slippers) and the latter boots also. The sandal (the word is Persian) was evidently the original covering for the feet over all southern and eastern Asia, while the shoe was probably introduced into India by the Persians, Afghans and Mo(n)gols, together with the "tip tilted" (Hittite and Etruscan) boot.

Both are usually made in India of leather, but never of pigskin, and, while the shoes are always colored red or yellow, the boots are generally brightly particolored, both among the upper classes being also richly embroidered in gold and silver and variegated silk thread and with bangles, bugles and seed pearls after the manner of the ancient Persian boots represented on Greek vases.

But, of however rare and costly elaboration, the invariable rule is to remove them after entering a private house just when stepping on to the mat* or carpet on which the visitor takes his seat. They must be cast off, the right boot or shoe first, before the worshiper enters a temple or mosque, and it is still regarded as an absolute profanation to attempt to enter either fully shod.—London Athenaeum.

She Made Herself Understood.
She was young and innocent looking and coy and shy, and the half dozen men among the passengers on a Chicago street car the other day caught themselves looking at her more than once and almost wishing they had such a daughter. Presently another girl got in, and the two exchanged exclamations of surprise. Two minutes later the last comer was saying loud enough to be heard all over the car:

"Dear me, Madge, but your new hat is a stunner!"

"Yes? Do you like it?"

"It's perfectly splendid. It must have cost at least $5."

"Five dollars!" echoed the coy and shy and innocent. "Why, my old 'guy' coughed up fourteen bones for this hat, and ———— $6 off at that!"

A HARROWING RIDE.

Dickens' Trip by Stagecoach From Cleveland to Sandusky.

When Charles Dickens visited America in 1842, he traveled by stagecoach from Cleveland to Sandusky, O. Describing his experience, he wrote:

"At one time we were all thrown together in a heap at the bottom of the coach, and at another we were crushing our heads against the roof. Now the coach was lying on the tails of the two wheelers, and now it was rearing up in the air. The driver, who certainly got over the ground in a manner quite miraculous, so twisted and turned the team in forcing a passage corkscrew fashion through the bogs and swamps that it was a common circumstance on looking out of the window to see the coachman with the ends of a pair of reins in his hands, apparently driving nothing, and the leaders starting unexpectedly at one from the back of the coach, as if they had some idea of getting up behind.

"A great portion of the way was over what is called a 'corduroy road,' which is made by throwing trunks of trees into a marsh and leaving them to settle there. The very slightest of the jolts with which the ponderous carriage fell from log to log was enough, it seemed, to have dislocated all the bones in the human body. It would be impossible to experience a similar set of sensations in any other circumstances unless perhaps in attempting to go up to the top of St. Paul's in an omnibus."

This description serves to illustrate the condition of our country roads, generally speaking, as they were half a century ago except in a few wealthy communities. There has been a wonderful change since then.

Peking Village Names.

"The Street of the Roasted Corn" is one of the curious names of streets in Peking and suggests the singular and often confusing names given to Chinese villages. Here are a few village names taken from an area of a few miles square: "Horse Words Village," from a tradition of a speaking animal; "Sun Family Bull Village," "Tiger Family Great Melon Village," "Tiger Catching Village," "Horse Without a Hoof Village," "Village of the Loving and Benevolent Magistrate" and the "Village of the Makers of Fine Toothed Combs."

Arthur H. Smith in his book on "Village Life in China" says that a market town on the highway, the well of which afforded only brackish water, was called "Bitter Water Shop," but as this name was not pleasing to the ear it was changed on the tax lists to "Sweet Water Shop." If any one asked how it was that the same fountain could thus send forth at the same time waters both bitter and sweet, he was answered, "Sweet Water Shop is the same as Bitter Water Shop."

Speak Kindly Words Now.

In the course of our lives there must be many times when thoughtless words are spoken by us which wound the hearts of others, and there are also many little occasions when the word of cheer is needed from us and we are silent.

There are lives of wearisome monotony which a word of kindness can relieve. There is suffering which words of sympathy can make more endurable, and often even to the midst of wealth and luxury there are those who listen and long in vain for some expression of disinterested kindness.

Speak to those while they can hear and be helped by you, for the day may come when all our expressions of love and appreciation may be unheard. Imagine yourself standing beside their last resting place. Think of the things you could have said of them and to them while they were yet living. Then go and tell them now.—Exchange.

Painless Deaths.

Probably the least painful death is by means of an overdose of chloroform. You begin with a pleasant sensation and end in oblivion. Prussic acid acts instantaneously. Presuming the agony of anticipation avoided, some violent deaths are quite painless, as they give no time for feeling pain. Such are being blown to pieces by dynamite or by a shell. Drowning is said to be a luxury, and experts have recommended opening a vein in a hot bath. Laudanum and other narcotics would run chloroform and ether hard for first place.

The Darling Little Humming Bird.

Courage has little or no relation to bodily size. The humming bird is the smallest of birds, but also one of the most fearless and pugnacious. He attacks kingbirds and hawks, and those tyrannical creatures, though of monstrous size in comparison, seem not at all ashamed to fly from his onsets. The fights of humming birds among themselves are often fierce and protracted.

Economical.

There is a reminiscence of Caleb Baderstone in the utterance of an economical Scotch butler who was lately waiting at an important dinner. He had taken round a plate of beef in vain. After his last effort at persuasion had failed he set it down in front of his master with decision. "Ye maun tak' that yersef," he said. "I canna' get anyither customer for it."

A Grand Success.

The story of a Scotchman who attended a funeral which lasted two days is told by a man who was present. On the second day, having imbibed too freely, he rose and proposed the health of the bride and groom. A friend urged him to sit down, saying, "This is not a wedding; it is a funeral." "Well," retorted the Scotchman, "whatever it is, it's a grand success."

He Wouldn't Split.

The tramp in the green goggles stood before the door.

"Yes," said the housewife kindly; "you can have a good meal if you split that wood."

"Madam," said the tramp in a precise grammatical manner, "I was born and raised in Boston— But stop, shall I tell you the sad, sad story of my life?"

"Yes, yes."

"When a youth in Boston, I was disinherited for splitting an infinitive, and since then (his voice broke) I have vowed never to split anything, not even the wood!"

"Slick 'im, 'Tige!"—Baltimore Herald.

20 Years!
Have made much improvement in ready-made things. Twenty years ago a man bought a ready-made suit under protest, and after he put it on hoped the thing wouldn't bust in some prominent place just when it would be embarrassing. Today a man buys a cheap suit because he can't afford a better one, or a high priced one because he prefers it to a tailor-made one. "The Nebraska" sells but one class of ready-made suits and overcoats—GOOD. If you buy a $5.00 all wool suit of us (as we are showing in our fall catalogue) it won't be a shoddy suit but an all wool suit. It will be good—look good—wear good. If you buy a suit as we are showing on page 9, for $15, you'll get as good a suit as anybody else sells for a quarter of a hundred dollars.

Men and Women of All Ages, I CAN CURE YOU!

The specialist is now indispensable. In all walks of life there is a demand for the man who can do one particular thing better than any one else, and such a man is one who has confined his endeavor to, and centered all of his energy and ability on the specialty he has chosen for his life's work.

Early in my professional career I realized that Chronic Diseases were not being given the attention which their importance warranted. I saw that these diseases required a special fitness which the busy practitioner could never acquire. For more than twenty years I have devoted myself exclusively to the study and treatment of these diseases, and the fact that physicians recommend me to their patients is an evidence of my skill and ability in my special line. I give special counsel to physicians with obstinate and obscure cases.

I have devoted particular attention to chronic diseases of men and women, and no other class of disease requires more intelligent and expert treatment. It is a fact that a majority of men owe the seriousness of their condition to improper treatment, and a failure to realize the importance of placing their case in the hands of a skilled and expert specialist.

Nervous Debility

Overindulgence, indiscretions and excesses are not the only causes of an impairment of sexual strength. Such a derangement frequently comes from worry, overwork, mental strain, etc., which gradually weakens and injures the system before the unfortunate victim realizes the true nature of his trouble. Nervousness, weak back, dizziness, loss of memory, spots before the eyes, despondency, etc., often are the first symptoms of an impairment of manly vigor, and if neglected serious results are sure to follow. I want to talk to every man who has any of these symptoms of weakening of his manly functions. I can promptly correct all irregularities, and under my skillful treatment you will have restored all of the strength and glory of your manhood. Whether you consult me or not, do not jeopardize your health by experimenting with ready-made medicines, free samples, so-called quick cures, etc., as the most delicate organs of the body are involved, and only an expert should be entrusted with your case. Send for free booklet, "Nervous Debility and Its Family of Ills."
