Fire Confined to The Coal Room of the Flour Plant.

The fire which started in the Stanton roller mills yesterday afternoon, was confined, by strenuous efforts on the part of firemen, to the coal room of the plant, and the main structure was saved. The blaze was created by spontaneous combustion.

The Stanton mill plays in hard luck. Once before it was burned completely, another time it was struck by lightning, again the dam went and just as it had been repaired, before even a wheel had turned, a rush of water came along and sent the new dam out.

BURIAL OF A VETERAN.

Commander of Regiment in "Iron Brigade" Given Military Honors.

The following account of the burial of Lieutenant Colonel Kerr of the Sixth Wisconsin regiment is taken from the Milwaukee Sentinel of the 17th. Captain Matrau of this city, the only surviving officer of the regiment, was in attendance and made an address, a portion of which is quoted by the Sentinel:

Lieut. Col. Thomas Kerr, one of the heroes of the famous "Iron Brigade," who died last Thursday, was buried with military honors from the chapel of the Soldiers' home yesterday afternoon, interment being at Forest Home cemetery. Several local survivors of the brigade were present, and Capt. Otto Schorser, Jerome Johnson, and H. C. Matrau of the gallant Sixth Wisconsin regiment, which Colonel Kerr commanded, were among the mourners. The funeral was accompanied to the gates of the home by the Soldiers' Home band, and a detail of soldiers escorted the remains to the cemetery and fired the last volleys over the grave.

The service of the Episcopal church was performed by the chaplain of the home, and Capt. H. C. Matrau, the only surviving officer of Col. Kerr's regiment, delivered an eloquent eulogy of the departed soldier, saying in part:

"Enlisting as a private in the Montgomery guards of Milwaukee, Col. Kerr, by fidelity in duty, valor on the field, and ability in handling his men, rose from the ranks to be lieutenant colonel and commander of his regiment. Brave and true men whom he led in battle must revere and love his memory. May he rest in peace in the soil which he gave his life's blood to preserve for us and posterity."

At the conclusion of the services the volleys were fired over the grave, the bugler sounded "taps" and the last rites over a brave and able soldier were finished.
