FLAMES EAT ROUNDHOUSE.

Building of Two Railroads Was Burned Completely.

IT MADE A BEAUTIFUL BLAZE.

Cause Can Not be Explained. Except Through the Match Theory—Loss is Between $4,000 and $3,000—Not Known as to Rebuilding of it.

Fire last evening completely destroyed the roundhouse owned by the Union Pacific railroad company and used for locomotives by that road and the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha line in Norfolk. The flame started from an unknown origin shortly after 6 o'clock and burned for several hours. The loss is estimated by the agent, J. B. Elseffer, at about $3,000 or $4,000. It has not been learned at the railroad headquarters whether or not the company will immediately rebuild but it is thought by officials at the station that a new building of some sort will replace the burned one, which stood north of Norfolk avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets.

No Locomotives in. There were no locomotives in the building when the fire broke out. The last one to leave had been the one drawing the Union Pacific freight train south in the afternoon and for three hours there had been no engine near the shed.

There were matches in the southwest corner of the building. This is the only possible cause for the blaze that can be suggested by the engineer, as the flame was first discovered in this corner. It was in this section that several railroad men had their beds and the trunks and personal property of four of them were burned. There were also consumed in the flame sixteen tons of coal which had been stored in the east end of the structure. Engineer Heinz is loser of an overcoat, also, in the fire.

Was a Beautiful Blaze.

Once fairly started, the oily saturation of the frame which has sheltered locomotives for the past twenty years fed the flame into a beautiful blaze and hundreds of spectators encircled the burning building as though it were a great spectacular feature of some stageland creation. The sky was black as a fitting background and the brilliant waves of glowing fire leaped vivaciously into upward space, eating gaseous clouds as they went.

Water Pressure Poor.

When firemen arrived and attached their hose, two streams were played upon the building but the pressure was poor. Engineer Grant, of the pumping station, explains that the standpipe was full and running over and that the lack of pressure at the fire was due to the fact that a 4-inch pipe leading into the roundhouse from the corner of Norfolk avenue and Seventh street, where the hose was attached, was wide open and that through this much of the water was lost.

Engines that formerly were housed in the shed are now standing on the tracks outside and the wipers work in the open air during the night. The building was built for four locomotives.

"The Head Waiters" is the attraction billed at the Auditorium for Thursday evening, November 5. It is headed by Joe Kelly, the pipe dreamer who is supported by his merry company in a roaring farce comedy. The New York Dramatic News of September 25, acknowledged to be the leading dramatic paper of the country, has to say of the company and entertainment: "Head Waiters was one of the best musical comedies the theatre-goers have been privileged to witness for many seasons, company is a strong one throughout and the stage settings were beautiful. Joe Kelly as an opium devotee, acted his part with much credit. There was continuous applause from beginning to end. The company should destroy their present supply of lithographs and advertise in a different manner, as the performance is of a high order and clean. As it is the people are misled as to the character of the production."

Three Arts—One Artist.

What one person can do toward providing entertainment, and splendid entertainment, for an audience, was forcibly illustrated at the M. E. church Wednesday night when Miss Ola Bidwell gave an entertainment that could not have been exceeded in interest by a company of many people. It was first class in every respect and the variety was in endless contrast. Miss Bidwell possesses a rare baritone voice and her singing was of the kind that delights the cultured musical ear, while of no less merit were the sweet tones that she emitted from her violin. Miss Bidwell's readings captivated the house and those of a humorous nature were convulsively mirth-provoking. It is pleasant to listen to a person having thorough control over one art, but when an entertainer is master of three, her possibilities in the amusement field are limitless. Each number brought an encore, which was generously responded to and even then members of the audience considered the program all too short.

Colored Vote.

A fictitious report has been circulated in some parts of the county by unscrupulous persons stating that the colored voters of Norfolk would support certain democratic candidates in the county election this fall. We want it distinctly understood that as a whole we intend to vote for the straight republican ticket and that we take pride in letting people know it. There is no mistake about our politics. There is but one man in the city who is doubtful and even he will likely stand by his liberators.

Al Johnson.
Bert Gordon.

W. H. Field's campaign is one of push and energy, a distinguishing trait of the man, and a trait that will be of value in the office of the clerk of the district court, as it furnishes its own evidence that the affairs of the office will be conducted on a progressive, business-like basis. His circle of friends has been growing continually since the campaign opened and the people of all portions of the county have found him to be the sort of candidate they like to honor.
