At the last session of the cour Novotny's appeal was dismissed and his case was remanded to the county court. He had previously been sentenced to ninety days in fail. He was at once confined in the county jail again and Friday tried to get away. When recaptured he bore evidence of three severe blows with an axe, evidently inflicted by himself. He was taken to a physician and nine stitches were required. Saturday afternoon when he was alone in fail he took off the bandage made a noose of it, attached one end o a bar of the cell, sat down and died. His feet touched the floor and was necessary to bend his knees o succeed in the strangle.
