Harry McLane Was Innocent. Harry W. McLane, the Northwestern locomotive fireman who was taken off an engine in Norfolk last month and transported to Belle Fourche, S. D., by a detective who claimed the fireman was wanted on a charge of horse stealing, has established his innocence and is back in Norfolk.

It was because the horsethief used McLane's name and because McLane resembled the description given of the real thief, that the innocent Northwestern fireman here was arrested and taken to Belle Fourche.

George Cunningham, night foreman of the Rock Island shops at Fairbury. Neb., went to Belle Fourche with an affidavit from the Rock Island showing that McLane on June 15, 1908 (the date of the horse theft) was employed and working in the Fairbury shops. An hour and fifteen minutes after this affidavit was filed with the county attorney at Belle Fourche, McLane was dismissed by the court.
