May Pave 39 Blocks.
Norfolk may pave thirty-nine blocks this summer instead of only the seven already provided for.

Traveling men in both hotels all through the fire were busily engaged trying to get their belongings together, and trunks were hauled out by them. Several times they came in contact with the stream of water which was being played on the fire in the west hallway of the Pacific hotel, by the firemen.

Another Girl Stepped On.
Another girl would have been tossed through a window as was Miss Marquardt, but the crowding of people prevented the men from getting free use of their arms and her weight proved too much for them. This was Miss Corinne Hirsch. She was stepped on and slightly bruised. Later she escaped through a rear exit.

How It Felt to Be Thrown Out.
Miss Marquardt, who was hurled through a window, lit upon a pile of boards with nails sticking in them. "When I saw the fire I was scared," she said to The News later. "And when I couldn't get out some man or men picked me up and threw me through a window. I struck on a pile of boards with nails sticking in me. Then some man stepped on me."
"Who's in there?"
"Opal Coryell."
"Who didn't she come out with you?"

Weddings at Stanton.
Stanton, Neb., June 3.—Special to The News: The following marriages took place at this place during the past week:
Oscar Moritz, aged 26, to Cora Wyatt, aged 25, May 24, both from Meadow Grove; Marcus Gottlieb Bruhn, aged 21, to Dora Wiebold, both from Platte county; John Karman, aged 23, to Emma Wainscott, aged 19, both of Stanton county.

What People Do in a Fire.
Several were slightly injured in a fire panic at the Crystal moving picture theater last evening. The stampede followed the burning of three reels of films, which caught fire from crossed wires.

Machine Operator Tells of It.
"I was winding up a reel," said Baker, the operator, after the fire, "and Emil Mathews was working the machine. A loose piece of film was lying on the floor near me and it suddenly caught fire, from the transformer, I believe. The wires must have been crossed. The reel I was winding was soon burning and I ran down the steps calling to Emil."
Mathews stayed by the machine, but soon reached for his hat and coat, which were hanging on a hook. He was burned about the face and arms. S. W. Warner and Adolph Moldenhauer, both jewelers in the employ of C. S. Hayes, were standing near the operating room when the explosion took place. The operator leaped over Moldenhauer's shoulders and alighted on top of a man nearby. The flames then cast a vivid flash over the little theater, which was soon the scene of a panic.

to the ceiling from the operating room. The panic stricken people, however, be, but it was estimated at several hundred dollars. The three films that were burned are worth $200 or $400. They belong to the Laemle film company. The picture machine, belonging to Koyen, is ruined.
Won't Reopen There.
Mrs. Scates said that the owners of the Pacific and Queen City hotels would not permit reopening of the theater in that place, if possible. They don't want the danger in their building. Norton Howe, landlord of the Queen City, went upstairs and turned on a water hydrant, allowing it to drain through the floor into the picture theater until the pipes melted. But Mrs. Scates said she thought that the theater would be reopened somewhere in town.

Crowd Going In.
"It was local vaudeville night and made their escape from the rear exit, which was jammed a number of times.

Girl Thrown Through Window.
Miss Cora Marquardt, daughter of Chief of Police Marquardt, was picked up bodily by a man and thrown through the glass window at the rear into the alley. When she fell, a man jumped on top of her, but she was only slightly bruised.

College Girl Rescued Old Woman.
Miss Opal Coryell, a Norfolk college girl, daughter of F. G. Coryell, was the heroine of the evening. She got out safely and was told that an old lady near whom she was sitting during the evening had not her escape and was lying on the floor inside. She broke loose from her companions and rushing into the burning theater brought the aged woman out.

Two Children Trampled On.
Little Krissie Kingsley and her brother, Richard Kingsley, both about 9 years old, were slightly injured as a result of falling over the ladder leading from the stage to the rear exit where they were trampled upon. The little girls' hands are badly smashed and the little boy's legs were bruised.

Hotel Guests Get Trunks Out.
Traveling men in both hotels all through the fire were busily engaged trying to get their belongings together, and trunks were hauled out by them. Several times they came in contact with the stream of water which was being played on the fire in the west hallway of the Pacific hotel, by the firemen.

The operator leaped over Moldenhauer's shoulders and alighted on top of a man nearby. The flames then cast a vivid flash over the little theater, which was soon the scene of a panic.

Lights Out, Women Scream.
The electric lights were out and women and children were crying for help while the men, with few exceptions, kept cool and their voices above the cries of the women could be heard calling: "Keep quiet," "Lots of time," "Keep cool," "Don't push," "Don't get excited."

cooler heads would have resulted in a serious catastrophe. The men busied themselves among the children, carrying them to the rear exit, from where they tossed them out of the window, which was close to the ground.

Firemen Do Good Work.
Then they entered the theater and made short work of the burning operating room. Chief Green then ordered the ladders raised to the upper story, occupied by the Queen City and Pacific hotels. Ben Skalowsky, who was the first fireman to enter one of the Pacific hotel rooms, discovered that the west hallway, which is partitioned off from the Queen City upper rooms by only a thin board partition, was a mass of flames which found their way up from a hole in the ceiling of the theater. Here the scene of excitement was at its height. Hotel guests endeavoring to get their trunks and belongings down took hold of most everything movable. Just as Fireman Skalowsky opened the water on the burning hallway, a hotel guest entered a room nearby and in his excitement started to drag out a mattress. He received the full contents of the first shot of water and soon could be heard screaming as he ran up the hallway. He dropped the mattress.

Fire in Pacific Extinguished.
The fire in the hall of the Pacific was of short duration, having been discovered in time to prevent much burning. The door frames and casing, a number of cots, carpets and storm windows stored in the rear end of the hall were damaged. In the Queen City smoke and water did the most damage. The South plumbing shop was soon filled with water coming from the ceiling, but the damage here is said to be slight.

Others Bruised.
Frank Fox, limbs bruised.
August Ohmsted, limbs bruised, while making his way out through the front door.
Mrs. E. J. Schoregge, who with her daughter were making their way out through the front, was forced into the little ticket office, which is located under the operating room. Here she called for help in vain, but after a struggle managed to get out.
Was Knocked Down.
W. H. Widaman, who was seated well toward the front of the stage, was knocked around by the rush and slightly bruised about the limbs. Assistant Fire Chief Herman Winter received a badly bruised hand while groping about in one of the hotel rooms.

W. H. Widaman, who was seated well toward the front of the stage, was knocked around by the rush and slightly bruised about the limbs. Assistant Fire Chief Herman Winter received a badly bruised hand while groping about in one of the hotel rooms.

When the fire started a large number of people were at the ticket office, asking for tickets and they are now thanking themselves for being among the lucky ones. The management of the theater was putting on a special vaudeville and a short time later the house would probably have been jammed.

"I was standing near the ticket office when the fire started," says S. W. Warner. "I got as near the wall as possible. The flames shot out of the windows of the operating room and it was only a second after the seats were thrown into the aisles and the lights went out. Women screamed, but most of the men were very cool. Not once was the call of 'fire' heard, the men doing their best to get the women out."

Harvey O'Brien, bell boy at the Pacific, was burned slightly about the head while rushing through the hallway calling to the guests that the hotel was afire.

A. Koyen, who owns both the Crystal and the Lyric moving picture theaters, was in Fremont at the time. It was not known what his loss would have been coming in fast. A half hour later would have meant a serious catastrophe," she said.

Ladder Blocks the Door.
A ladder on the stage that was to have been used for the "moon" scene, toppled over and blocked the rear door, so that people had to step over upon her hand till Allen Trulock lifted her up.

This Man Was Nearly Crazy.
Miss Florence Parker, a Norfolk teacher, tells of a big fat man who was just ahead of her. He lost his head and began elbowing his way through the crowd, heedless of women and children. After he got outside he was white as a ghost and trembling like a leaf. "I don't know how I got out," Miss Parker said. "I don't remember a thing about that."

So Did This Man.
Another man picked up a little child and placed the babe on top of the piano near the stage. There he left the tot, who soon fell off.

Lost Her Purse With $7.
Mrs. Waddell lost her purse containing $7. She left it in the theater and it has not been found.

Rev. Edwin Booth, jr., who entered the theater toward the end, found a woman's hat. This he brought out. A woman rushed up to him, seized the hat and demanded, "Where's my pocketbook?" He hadn't seen it. As soon as the fire broke out, women and children began screaming wildly. "Help, Mercy," they cried, and then they just screamed.

A Dangerous Rear Exit.
The wonder is that more were not hurt in escaping by the rear exit. At the back of the room the stage stretches completely across. In the center of the building, at the back of the stage, is a single door. To get to the door it was necessary to climb up on the stage—a good, big climb for a woman in heavy skirts or for a child—and it seemed remarkable that nobody was hurt in that climb. Mrs. Scates, managing the theater, estimated that there were about 100 persons inside. "Men went crazy," she said. "They left their hats, and when a man will leave his hat, he's pretty batty."

It was an unlucky day for W. H. Widaman, who was in the Crystal fire. During the morning Mr. Widaman, who lives near the Northfork river, was endeavoring to lead his cow from the pasture. The cow was tied near the mill race and when close to the bank she started pulling on the rope. Mr. Widaman pulled with might and main and, using the river bank as a brace, gave an extra hard tug to the hemp when suddenly "Fanny," the cow, let loose and Mr. Widaman was thrown into the water, which is about twelve feet deep. He was forced to swim back to shore, where he found the cow looking down at him. Using his own words, "she stood there smiling."
