Circus Ran Into Rain.

Gollmar Brothers' big circus reached Norfolk in a heavy rain Wednesday morning. The circus trains came over the M. & O. road at an early morning hour and proceeded to put up its tents and give its show, regardless of the infavorable weather. The show car ries thirty-two cars and 432 people.

Buggies, carriages, wagons now and then, and trains all did business bring ing people to the Gollman circus.

Of course there was the usual pa rade with everything clean, bright and attractive. Hundreds of connoisseurs in the art of putting up a circus tent and unloading the gorgeously tinsled wagons from the trains were on hand at summy to get a line on the work They gazed with unrestrained joy on he many slights and listened with awe to the mysterious grunts that now and then emanated from the hungry stom the of the ferocious wild beasts in nclosed wagons. It was the same old circus parade

o old yet new. There were man; nen and women in sorgeous costum on horseback. Then there were the bands without which there could be no circus. Elephants, many of them, and amels and dromedaries were in the ine of parade. Big lions with bushy manes caused the "kids" along the line of march to draw quick breaths as they thought of what might happen if these terrible beasts should climb through the steel bars that separated them from the crowd. Just for the purpose of whetting the appetite of ling wagons carrying the two-horned nome is doomed to destruction be rhinoceros and the famous "bloodsweating behemoth of holy writ" be hind closed doors and spectators could only imagine awful things hidden

And finally at the end of the parade ame the indispensable, ever-present heart-warming, nerve-racking, earstretching calliope, playing everything has gotten away from a Pauline from "Rainbow" to "There'll Be a Hot basis," he continued, "I mean it has Time in the Old Town Tonight." This, with the possible exception of the clowns, made the biggest hit with the kids, who strung along in the wake of Its mellifluous strains like bees around a hive.

Two performances were scheduled is usual during the day. In the afternoon a crowd composed chiefly of country visitors packed the big tent. The show was pleasing to everybody. It is evident that Gollmar Bros. are aware that this is an age of progress that the people demand something new and in keeping up with the times have one of the best though not the largest three-ring circuses that ever gave a performance in Norfolk.
