

On The STAGE

"The Prince of Pilsen."
He's the same old Jess Dandy. Same "Vas you efer in Zinzinnati?" Same "bubbles." Same ecstatic expression over his face when he accidentally falls into the fountain and finds how cooling the water is upon his fevered brow. And the same old hilarious audience, convulsed with mirth, as he takes that bath in his dress suit after "rolling" all night on top of a billiard table with a billiard ball underneath him.

"His joyous highness, the "Prince of Pilsen" ruled in Norfolk last night. And the populace voted him the right to rule. Christmas rush was laid aside for the moment and a big audience, pretty nearly a capacity house, turned out to see Henry W. Savage's all-star cast in the great revival production of "The Prince." Everybody liked it, too.

The show hasn't deteriorated the slightest bit. With the addition of its own complete orchestra, led by Hinrichs, it has, in fact, taken on a new feature that's gratifying. Otto Voget of Norfolk, by the way, who was formerly musical director in Madison Square Garden, New York, under Mr. Hinrichs, met his old associate and played a violin part with the orchestra throughout the evening.

The new company, containing most of the original stars, is a distinctive one. Miss Frances Cameron, "the widow," is a beautiful woman to look upon and she's delightfully clever. She has a real voice, a winsome smile and a lot of good looking clothes. Her gowns and her marvelous hats were quite a feature of the show. Miss Cameron was the original "widow" in "The Merry Widow."

Edward Mora is a good looking "prince" and sings well. Iver Anderson was again "Lieutenant Tom Wagner," the same role in which he was seen here five years ago. Incidentally, he still can sing.

Walter Catlett makes a splendid "Artie, old boy." Robert O'Connor is a nimble "Francis." Olive North is "Edith Adams" sings prettily and Lillian Lawson as "Sidonie" is a fascinating dancer.

The costumes were all fresh and new and the show up to the usual Savage standard.

NEW YORK DRAMATIC LETTER.

New York, Dec. 24.—Of course the spirit of Christmas fills the air, but though one finds it expressed most fully in the shops, the theaters are suffering no loss of patronage. For one thing, there are more visitors to the city this year than usual, every hotel reporting a record business. The same is true of the theaters. The announcement that the engagement of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt is to be extended one week comes like a Christmas gift to many theatergoers, for not half of the people who desire to see the great actress have been able to get accommodations during her short engagement here. When she leaves New York, Mme. Bernhardt will go to the Pacific coast and thence to Australia, if present plans are carried out.

E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe have added "As You Like It," "Hamlet" and "Romeo and Juliet" honors to the triumph scored by their presentation of "Macbeth." The three former plays are productions in which Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe have been seen many times, it is true, but they are more complete this season, more lavish and more accurate in every detail.

Mrs. Leslie Carter continues at the Lyric theater in Rupert Hughes' play "Two Women," which is admirably adapted to display all the cleverness of America's leading emotional actress. Mrs. Carter's attractiveness alone is sufficient to assure large audiences at the Lyric for the remaining weeks of the engagement.

James Montgomery's farcical comedy, "The Aviator," with Wallace Edginger in the title role, has settled down to a prosperous run at the Astor theater. Mr. Edginger is an expert comedian and the playwright has given him a play full of wit, snap and action.

New York must say goodbye to Miss May Irwin and "Getting a Polish" at Wallack's tonight, for there are other engagements which demand Miss Irwin's clever abilities elsewhere. "Pomander Walk" will follow Miss Irwin at Wallack's.

Sam Bernard in "He Came from Milwaukee" has passed his 150th performance at the Casino theater. Mr. Bernard plays the role of a Milwaukee brewer who encounters all sorts of adventures in Europe and is supplied with a long list of humorous sayings.

William Gillette reappears as the Rev. Robert Spaulding in the farcical comedy "The Private Secretary" at the Empire theater. This is the play that brought him his first celebrity in 1884. He is varying "The Private Secretary" with "Secret Service."

The holiday season has not affected in the least the popularity of "The Gambblers," Charles Klein's latest play, at Maxine Elliott's theater. The strength displayed by the author in the construction of the play and the excellence of the cast by which it is produced, makes "The Gambblers" one of the season's most effective dramatic offerings.

Daly's continues to be the home of "Baby Mine," Margaret Mayo's delightful farce. This play has a humor that seems to ripen with age, and will find friends as long as it remains in New York.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" has entered its 150th week at the Booth that the public prefers plays that are clean as well as entertaining.

At the New York Hippodrome thousands are visiting the three spectacles, "The International Clip," "The Earthquake" and "The Ballet of Niagara." The new circus is also a big feature of the entertainment.

"The Commuters," James Forbes' comedy, has celebrated its 150th performance at the Criterion theater. Mr. Forbes shows the same keen sense of observation of men and manners as was so evident in "The Chorus Lady" and "The Travelling Salesman."

Edgar Selwyn's comedy, "The Country Boy," has reached its fifth month at the Liberty theater. Much of its success is due, no doubt, to the human note and general appeal that is embodied in its illustration of a country boy's experience in coming to New York to make a name for himself and win a fortune.

At the American music hall this week the program is headed by Nana, a Parisian whirlwind dancer. Tom Terris and his company of fourteen associate English players, present for the first time in this country "A Man's Shadow." There are twenty other fine features on the bill of this playhouse.

William Collier in "I'll Be Hanged if I Do," at Collier's comedy theater continues to attract crowds and prove one of the amusing sensations of the season.

AS LUCK GOES IN RAFFLES.

Things That Happened to Patrons of the Doomed Games.
Kansas City, Dec. 24.—Now that the raffles for food, fuel, clothing, motor cycles, jewelry, motor cars, houses and lots and nearly everything else are to be discontinued after January 1, men who have been playing the raffles for the last two years are relating incidents. A group of men stood in a cigar store yesterday telling of the good and bad luck of the raffle patrons.

W. C. Roland was surprised Sunday by a large number of friends and relatives. The entertainment was in honor of Mr. Roland's birthday anniversary.

I know a woman who spent about the last dollar in the house for a chance on a motor car," one of the men remarked. "The day she won the motor car her husband lost his job. They'd been up against it right if she hadn't taken the chance."

"Yes, and I know a guy that spent $175 in one raffle and drew nothing but numbers," another man declared. "This got them started telling stories, and here are some of the experiences:

A dishwasher at the Savoy hotel reluctantly spent a dollar for a ticket on a car. When he was notified that he had drawn the machine he asked the chef for an hour's leave of absence.

"Can't spare you now," the chef replied.

"Yes, you can," the dishwasher replied. "I've got a $1,500 motor car that I just won and I'm quitting."

An official of a telephone company, in attempting to pull one envelope from the package offered him, drew five numbers.

"That's lucky," the clerk remarked; "better take all of them."

"One's plenty," the customer replied. The clerk recorded the other four numbers, just to see how his prediction would come out when the drawing took place. One of the numbers the customer declined to accept won the car.

Some of the merchants where the raffles are being held declare that they are glad the police intend to stop them January 1.

"The raffles create more or less dissatisfaction," one merchant said yesterday. "When we're in the raffle business we ask our customers if they desire to take chances. Some of them do not like the proposition and get offended. There are the others that invest considerable money in these games of chance and get sore because they fail to win anything. We're glad they are stopping them."
