JENNIE BAXTER: JOURNALIST

BY ROBERT BARR.

The Prime Minister's Indiscretion.

(Copyright, 1900, by Robert Barr.)

As Jennie rapidly hurried away from the office of Mr. Cadbury Taylor there arose in her mind some agitation as to what the detective would think of her sudden flight. She was convinced that, up to the moment of leaving him so abruptly, he had not the slightest suspicicn that she herself, to whom he was then talking, was the person he had been searching for up and down Europe. What must be think of one who, while speaking with him, suddenly, without a word of leave taking, disappeared as if the earth had opened and swallowed her, and all because the handle of the door to the inner room had turned? Then the excuse she had given for not wishing to meet Lord Donal must have struck him as ridiculously inadequate. When she reached her desk and reflected with more calmness over the situation, she found no cause to censure herself for her hasty departure. Although she had acted on sudden impulse, she saw there had been nothing else to do. Another moment and she would have been face to face with Lord Donal himself.

Next day brought a note from the detective which somewhat reassured her. He apologized for having made the appointment without her permission and explained that Lord Donal's unexpected arrival in London and his stubborn unbelief that it had been the princess herself whom he met at the ball seemingly left the detective no alternative but to call on the person who had so persistently advanced the theory, to explain it to the one most intimately concerned. It had not occurred to him at the time to think that Miss Baxter might object to meet Lord Donal, who was an entire stranger to her, but now he saw where he was wrong, etc. This note did much to convince Jennie that, after all, the detective had not seen the clews which appeared to be spread so plainly before his eyes. Cadbury Taylor, however, said nothing about the search being ended, and a few days later Jennie received a disquieting letter from the Princess von

"My dear Jennie," her highness wrote, "I am sure the detectives are after you, and so I thought it best to send you a word of warning. Of course it is only surmise on my part, but for days there has been a woman hovering about the castle, trying to get information from my servants. My maid came directly to me and told me what she knew. The woman detective had spoken to her. This inquisitive person, who had come from Paris, wished particularly to know whether I had been seen about the castle during the week in which the Duchess of Chiselhurst's ball took place, and so this leads me to suppose that some one is making inquiries for you. It must be either Lord Donal netic, full of life, nerve and vigor, take No-To | Stirling or the Duke of Chiselhurst, but I rather think it is the former. I have written an indignant letter to Lord Donal, accusing him of baying caused detectives to haunt the castle. I have not yet received a reply, but Lord Donal is a truthful person, and in a day or two I expect to find out whether or not he has a hand in this business. Meanwhile, Jennie, be on your guard, and I will write you again as soon as I have something further to tell." The reading of this letter greatly increased Jennie's fears, for she felt assured that, stupid as the men undoubtedly were, they verged so closely on the brink of discovery that they were almost certain to stumble upon the truth if the investigation were continued. She wrote a hurried note to the princess. imploring her to be cautious and not inadvertently give any clew that would lead to her discovery. Her letter evidently crossed one from the princess you were quite right in speaking.' herself. Lord Donal had confessed, said the letter, and promised never, never to do it again. "He says that before my letter was received he had stopped the detectives, who were doing no good Our family realize so much from the and apparently only annoying innocent people. He says the search is ended, as word to induce others to use it. If far as the detective is concerned, and people are interested in their health and that I need fear no more intrusions from inquiry agents, male or female. He apologized very handsomely, but says he has not given up hopes of finding them all, but Grain-O I have found the lady who disappeared. And now, superior to any, for the reason that it is Jennie, I hope that you will admit my cleverness. You see that I only had a word or two from my maid as a clew, but I unraveled the whole plot and at once discovered who was the instigator of it. So I think I wouldn't make a bad detective myself. I am tremendously interested in episodes like this. I believe if I had known nothing of the impersonation and if the case had been put in my hands I should have discovered you long ago. Can't you think of some way in which my undoubted talent for research may be made use of? You don't know how much I envy you in your newspaper office, always with some mystery on hand to solve. It must be like being the editor of a puzzle department. I wish you would let me help you next time you have something important to do. Will you promise?

"When you write again, please send your letter to Vienna, as we are going into residence there, my husband having been unexpectedly called to the cap ital. He holds an important position in the government, as perhaps you remember. Jennie was delighted to know that all inquiry had ceased, and she wrote a long letter of gratitude to the princess. She concluded her epistle by saying: "It is perfectly absurd of you to envy one who has to work as hard as I. You are the person to be envied. It is not all beer and skittles in a newspaper the next time I have an interesting case on band I shall write and give you full particulars, and I am sure that together we shall be invincible."

But one trouble leaves merely to give place to another in this life. Jennie was disturbed to notice that Mr. Hardwick was becoming more and more confidential with her. He sat down by her desk whenever there was a reasonable thing to do. It needs a war, not a excuse for doing so, and he consulted to her, and she knew it was through his influence with the board of directand decisive in business matters, he affections were concerned, and he often dently wishing to say something and to say, and thus the situation became girl and had no desire to complicate the situation by allowing her employer to fall in love with her, yet it was impostentions might be limited strictly to a business basis. The crisis, however, was brought on by Mr. Hardwick himself. One day when they were alone together he said abruptly:

"That romance in high life which bury Taylor did not come to anything?" "No, Mr. Hardwick."

"Then don't you think we might enact a romance in high life in this very | do you think of it?" room? It is high enough from the street to entitle it to be called a romance in high life." And the editor grinned uneasily, like an unready man who hopes to relieve a dilemma by a poor joke.

Jennie, however, did not laugh and did not look up at him, but continued to scribble shorthand notes on the paper before her.

"Ah, Mr. Hardwick!" she said, with a sigh. "I see you have discovered my secret, although I hoped to conceal it even from your alert eyes. I am, indeed, in the situation of Ralph Rackstraw in 'Pinafore'-'I love, and love, alas, above my station'-and now that you know half you may as well know all. It arose out of that unfortunate ball given by the Duchess of Chisel-

Don't you think we might enact a romance in high life in this very room?" burst, which will haunt me all the rest of my life, I fear," said Jennie, still without looking up. Mr. Hardwick smothered an ejaculation and was glad that the girl's eyes were not upon him. There was a pause of a few moments' duration between them. He took the path that was left open to him, fondly flattering himself that while he had stumbled inadvertently upon her romance he had kept his own secret safe.

"I-I have no right to intrude on your confidences, Miss Baxter," he said finally with an effort, "and I hope you will excuse me for-for"-

"Oh, I have been sure for some days that you knew it!" interrupted the girl, looking up, but not at him. "I have been neglecting my work, I fear, and so

"No: your work is all right. It wasn't that exactly-but never mind. We won't speak of this any more, for I see it embarrasses you.

"Thank you, Mr. Hardwick," said Jennie, again bending her eyes on the desk before her. The man saw the color come and go in her cheeks and thought he had never beheld any one so entrancing. He rose quickly without making further attempt at explanation and left the room. One or two teardrops stained the paper on which the girl was scribbling. She didn't like giving pain to any one, but could not hold herself to blame for what had happened. She made up her mind to leave The Daily Bugle and seek employment elsewhere; but next day Mr. Hardwick showed no trace of disappointment and spoke to her with that curt imperiousness which had heretofore been his custom.

"Miss Baxter." he said, "have you been reading the newspapers with any degree of attention lately?' "Yes, Mr. Hardwick.

"Have you been watching the drift of foreign politics?" "Do you refer to that speech by the prime minister of Austria a week or two ago?" "Yes: that is what I have in my mind. As you know, then, it amounted almost to a declaration of war against England-almost, but not quite. It was a case of saying too much or of not saying enough. However, it was not followed up, and the premier has been as dumb as a graven image ever since. England has many enemies in different parts of the world, but I must confess that this speech by the Austrian premier came as a surprise. There must have been something hidden which is not visible from the outside. The premier is too astute a man not to know exactly what his words meant, and he was under no delusion as to how England office, which is a good thing, for I don't | would take them. It is a case, then, of like beer, and I don't know what skit- 'when I was so quickly done for I tles is -or are. But I promise you that | wonder what I was begun for.' That is what all Europe is asking."

"Is it not generally supposed, Mr. Hardwick, that his object was to consolidate Austria and Hungary? I understood that local politics was at the bottom of his flery speech." "Quite so, but the rousing of the war spirit in Austria and Hungary was useless unless that spirit is given somethreat of war, to consolidate Austria her on matters important and on mat- and Hungary. If the speech had been ters trivial. An advance of salary came | followed by hostile action or by another outburst that would make war inevitable, I could understand it. The tone of ors. Although Mr. Hardwick was sharp the speech indicates that the prime minister meant business at the time he proved an awkward man where his gave utterance to it. Something has occurred meanwhile to change the situacame and sat by the girl's desk, evi- tion, and what that something is all the newspapers in Europe have been trying yet quite as evidently having nothing to find out. We have had our regular Vienna representative at work ever embarrassing. Jennie was a practical since the words were uttered, and for the past two weeks he has been assisted by one of the cleverest men I could send him from London; but, up to sible to go to him and ask that his at- date, both have failed. Now, I propose that you go quietly to Vienna. I shall not let either of the men know you are at work on the affair at which they have labored with such little success, for both are good men, and I do not want to discourage either of them. you were investigating with Mr. Cad- Still, above all things, I wish to have the solution of this mystery. So it occurred to me last night that you might succeed where others had failed. What "I am willing to try," said Miss Baxter, as there flashed across her mind an idea that here was a case in which Princess von Steinheimer could be of the greatest assistance to her.

"It has been thought," went on the editor, "that the emperor is extremely averse to having trouble with England or any other country. Still, if that were the case, a new cabinet would undoubtedly have been formed after this intemperate address of the premier; but this man still holds his office, and there has been neither explanation nor apology from court or cabinet. I am convinced that there is something behind all this, a wheel within a wheel of some sort, because the day after the speech there came a rumor from Vienna that an attempt had been made on the life of the emperor or of the premier. It was exceedingly vague, but it was alleged that a dynamite explosion had taken place in the palace. This was promptly contradicted, but we all know what official contradictions amount to. There is internal trouble of some kind in the court at Vienna, and if we could publish the full details such an article would give us a European reputation. When could you be ready to begin your journey, Miss Baxter?

"I am ready now." "Well, in an affair like this it is best to lose no time. You can leave tomorow morning, then?"

"Oh, certainly; but I must leave the office at once, and you must get some one to finish the work I am on." "I will attend to that." said the

Thus relieved, Jennie betook herself was now in Vienna, she would probably herself reach that city as soon as her note, so she telegraphed that something important was on hand which would take her to Vienna by next day's Orient express and intimated that it was a matter in which she might need the assistance of the princess. Then she hastened to her rooms to pack up. That evening there came an answering telegram from Vienna. The princess asked her to bring her ball dress and all the rest of her finery. The lady added that she herself would be at the railway station and asked Jennie to telegraph to her en route. It was evident that her highness was quite prepared to engage in whatever scheme there was on hand,

SAFE.

The little child is safe from ordin ary dangers in the care of the faith dog. But neither the dog' fidelity, nor the mother's love can guard a child from those invisible foes that lurk in the air, water and food - the germs of disease. Children need to be specially watched and cared for. When there is loss of appetite, lassitude and listless ness in a child, an attempt should be made to revive the appetite and rally the spirits. In this attempt it is to be borne in mind that the first step to health is to put the stomach and organs digestion and nutrition into perfect working order The child's physical life is supported by food, but the benefit received from the food depends entirely on the ability to digest and assimilate the nutrition the food contains. That is why a child may eat heartily and yet be frail and "scrawny." It is not getting the nutrition out of the food it eats. In view of these facts the folly of feeding a child nauseous oils or the modified nastiness of their emulsions is apparent. These also are foods. They claim to be foods easily assimilated. But what is needed is not to bring the food down to the level of the weak stomach, but bring the stomach up to the level of strong, nutritions food.

THE PEOPLE'S

The value of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery lies in the fact that it strengthens the weak stomach and heals diseases of the other organs of digestion and nutrition. Its purely vegetable character and absolute freedom from alcohol and narcotics commend it to every thoughtful person. It is pleasant to the taste, unlike the foul oils and their emulsions offered for children's use. "Golden Medical Discovery" makes pure blood and sound flesh, and absolutely eliminates from the system the poisons which feed disease. Mrs. Ella Gardner, of Waterview, Middlesex Co., MEDICAL ADIT
