

WESTWARD BOUND.

Journal by Wagon from Columbus, Nebraska, to Washington Territory—Jottings by the Way.

EDITOR JOURNAL: Leaving Sidney we follow the course of the railroad, passing Brownson, Potter, Bennett, Antelope and Bushnell, which is the last station in Nebraska. The country has considerably changed in appearance, instead of the rich, loamy soil of eastern Nebraska, we find gravelly or sandy bottom, while the bluffs on either side of Lodge Pole are crowned with high shelving rocks and projecting cliffs; yet the country is good for stock and all along may be seen cattle grazing in large or small herds as may suit their taste. Here no vile herder questions the right of cattle to be free, and roam as they please. For instance: I interviewed one herder near Big Springs; in reply to inquiries he said that his employer had 15,000 head; that they might be found almost anywhere within an extent of country of 75 or 80 miles east and west, about 15 miles north or south of the Platte river.

The country along or convenient to the railroad and extending from Julesburg to Cheyenne Pass, situated some 30 miles northwest from Cheyenne city, is watered by Lodge Pole creek, a fine mountain stream which, flowing through a great stock country, waters immense herds, and is scarcely as large where it empties into the Platte as it is 150 miles westward, where it leaves the mountains. At places it is lost in its sandy bed for a few miles, but rises again to flow on as before. It is only 10 or 12 feet wide here. The country bordering on this stream is highly picturesque, the scrubby pines which fringe the rocky steps adding in no small degree to the beauty of the scenery. The nights are usually real cool, too much so for comfort, the mercury at nights being generally about 45° or 50°, and twice up to June 18th we had frosts, but most of the emigrants are provided with tents, or if not, they have good wagon covers and a good supply of blankets, yet we hear no complaints of sleeping too warm. Most of those who have never traveled in this way will think it very monotonous and wearisome, but take a look at our camp after night; supper is over and the work all done; there are lights in all the tents; two or three large camp-fires are burning, while a knot of eight or ten may be seen sitting or standing around talking of their future or past homes; the number of miles they will make the next day; where they will find good camping places, the relative prospects for wood, water and grass, but not one word on politics, religion or railroads are many words wasted. And now the young folks are having a merry time, some are singing, others telling something new, while a little farther down the creek where the other train is camped the sweet strains of the violin are distinctly heard.

Near Hillsdale station our party caught their first view of the snow-capped peaks of the Rocky mountains, and though the sight was not new to me, yet it appears to unfold new grandeur each time we behold it, and I felt like exclaiming, in the language of the poet,— "The works of art I don't admire, They are transient and they're vain; Give me the lofty mountains high, The river and the plain."

Moody's Opinion. Mr. Moody is satisfied that tabernacle work outside the churches in the large cities is a mistake, since it has often happened in his experience that the converts have not attached themselves to any church. It is better, he believes, to address small audiences in the churches where the results of his work will be more certain to remain. Mr. Moody will pass the coming summer at Northfield, and early in the autumn will go to St. Louis, where he will remain six months, having the aid of Mr. Sankey, who returns from England. Mr. Moody was recently in Boston, and at a reunion of Christians he said if he understood this Christian life it was a battle. He had been in the fight twenty-four years. He started with the idea that after he was converted all he had to do was to fold his arms and "float right along into heaven." But he soon found that the Old Man was not dead in him; that the flesh still lived, and that the world and the devil were yet alive. From his experience and from careful reading of the Bible he had learned that when a person is converted he has only enlisted; the weary marches, and hard fights, the wilderness, the deserts, and the mountains are all before him.—New York Tribune.

Training the Girls. Perhaps one of the most lamentable errors of the present day is the manner in which our girls are trained. While proud and happy parents are desirous that their daughters be accomplished in music, drawing, painting and the languages, they see them totally to ignore the more necessary arts of housekeeping and home-making, or to imagine the knowledge of such to be degrading. We know of no more profitable object than a young wife placed at the head of her husband's home, utterly ignorant of her duties as mistress. Trials, well calculated to make her life miserable, await her, and many of the unhappy marriages of our day are just such cases; for while men are loving and indulgent, they are selfish, and but few have sufficient self-denial to bear patiently the mistakes that enter so materially into their comforts.—American Traveler.

Never fail to do that good which lies next to your hand. Trust God to weave your little thread into the great web, though the pattern shows it not. The grand harvest of the ages shall come to its reaping, and the day shall broaden itself to a thousand years, and the thousand years shall show themselves as a perfect and finished day.

Pluck Wanted.

How many young fellows, starting out in life, say: "If somebody would only give me a start I could succeed." Oh! no! It is not the start that is wanted, it is the pluck to make the start yourself, and trust for help afterwards. One-half, aye, more, two-thirds of the young men now growing up lack the confidence to put their shoulder to the wheel and push for themselves. They want to get on top of the business wheel and let some one give it a start, when they imagine it will continue to roll, taking them along with it. Looking back over the acquaintances of our youth—and doubtless many men can do the same—we can remember several who were given just such aid as they asked for. They were placed on top of the wheel of business, and a good start given. The wheel rolled; and in the course of time the young man found himself beneath the wheel instead of on the top. Others did their own pushing. They got on the bottom, and as the wheel revolved they found themselves nearer and nearer the top. It requires pluck, thought, confidence in your own ability to make a living, even if your present business scheme should fail, and a hopeful heart which only rebounds from adversity and gathers a wealth of experience in every failure. These are the qualities which a poor man, young or old, must have if he would become rich, and they are what government or legislation cannot give him. Those men who are born rich are not always the richest in the end. In fact, in this country, they too often become the poorest. The start they had did them no good, for it did not teach them self-reliance.

A Fearless Woman. The Ogdensburg Journal details the experience of a tramp in that city: "A tramp called at the residence of Henry Carlton, on Hamilton street, in this city, Friday afternoon, and asked for something to eat. Mrs. Carlton, who had just been making a batch of fried-cakes, set a plateful before him, of which the tramp ate heartily. When he had satisfied his wants, he said: 'There is something peculiar about these cakes. They have a peculiar flavor. Did you put something in them to poison me?' at the same time assuming a domineering swagger and insulting tone. Mrs. Carlton, seeing she had an ugly customer to deal with, stepped to her bureau, and taking her husband's revolver, drew a line on the tramp and told him to get out of her house. He put his hand into his pocket and said: 'We'll see; that's a game that two can play at.' Mrs. Carlton stepped forward quickly, and covering him to a dead certainty with her revolver, said: 'You remove your hand from your pocket and you are a dead man instantly. Now move out.' One look sufficed to satisfy the tramp that a raised hand would cause his departure to a warmer if not a more congenial climate, and he commenced backing for the door, closely followed by the plucky woman, who carried a steady hand and a watchful eye."

What an Old Man has Noticed.

I have noticed that all men are honest when well watched. I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds. I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature, it is necessary at times to be downright mad. I have noticed that silks, broadcloths, and jewelry are often bought with other people's money. I have noticed that whatever is, is right, with a few exceptions—the left eye and left leg and the left side of a plum pudding.

I have noticed that the prayer of the selfish man is, "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody that owes him pay to the utmost farthing. I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue, is certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought in mercy to his neighbor, to surrender the razor to justice. I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition, and the idol of them all.

GENTLE WORDS.—Men and women are wickedly foolish if they quarrel after marriage has bound them together. Some people think a matrimonial squabble "makes no difference." It will make all the difference in the world. Women should grow more devoted and men more fond after marriage, if they have the slightest idea of being happy as wives and husbands. It is losing sight of this fundamental truth which leads to hundreds of divorces. Yet many a man will scold his wife, who would never think of breathing a harsh word to his sweetheart; and many a wife will be grim and morose on her husband's return, who had only smiles and words of cheer for him when he was a suitor. How can such people expect to be happy? Discontent is sure to creep into their hearts.

A little six-year old came to her grandfather the other day, with a trouble weighing on her mind. "Aunt says the moon is made of green cheese and I don't believe it." "Don't you believe it? Why not?" "Because I've been looking in the Bible, and found out that the moon is not made of green cheese, for the moon was made before the cows."
