Almost Worse.

About 1 o'clock Saturday those who were in Kramer's store were startled by the sudden giving away and falling of the shelves on the west side. The "racket" began at the east end of the seventy feet of shelving, but giving very little warning for escape. The goods, of course, were precipitated to the counter and floor, scattered and piled very promiscuously. A little child, in the arms of its mother, was considerably frightened and added its share of noise to the general confusion. For a moment only, the busy force were quiet, and then M. K. issued orders for having the shelves "fixed" and the goods piled up. No one was hurt, which is very fortunate and surprising, considering the suddenness of the loosening from the wall, and the great weight of the shelves and goods.
