E. C. Kavanaugh.

On Wednesday morning last, when announcement was made of the death of E. C. Kavanaugh, it could scarcely be credited that the man a who was so full of life and vigor a by his Hon. the Mayor for the purweek before was lying cold and immovable, clad for the grave .--Truly, the habitations of the dead E. C. Kavanaugh. The following and the living are not far asunder, and the summons may come at any moment to go from the land of the living to that bourne whence no traveller returns. The deceased was born in Ireland forty-six years ago last June, and possessed in good measure the proverbial generosity and impetuosity of the Irish nature.

He was a man of unbounded energy and activity; taking a very lively interest in city and county politics, he has made his influence felt in every campaign for several years. His imperious will held his forces well together, and whatever his political opponents had to say against him, they could not divide his following, and they could not -- Remember the little ones at but acknowledge the intense earn-Christmas. He was a man not easily deceived, and read men's intentions as an open book. He seemed to delight in participating in the management of public affairs, not so much from a motive of individual gain as for the opportunity it gave for the exercise of his faculties.

At the time of his death he occu pied the office of councilman for the second ward of this city, a position which he held two successive terms. His official work was, like everything else he undertook, zealously entered upon, and thoroughly well
