House Monday, Jan. 5. Poor Charley Ross! Never in the whole range of fiction, was anything more mysterous than the abduction and concealment of this child-with Wm. The most stringent search, conducted by the most experienced detectives, has hitherto failed in bringing this mystery of mysteries to light, and the tragic death of his abductors, coupled with the confession of one of them, still seems to bring us no nearer the end. Truth is indeed stranger than fietion. Yet the story of this poor which equals, if it does not surpass the wildest romance, may, if the facts should ever be discovered, prove to be very similar to John Brougham's highly sensational drama of "Minnie's Luck; or the Ups nose the other day at Grand Island, and Downs of New York Life," which is now being played to crowded houses, throughout all sections of the United States, by those brilliant and accomplished young artists, the Wallace Sisters, Jennie and Maud. The heroine of the story, who, stolen from motives of revenge, goes through a series of the most exciting adventures, is personated by Miss Jennie Wallace, the star of this fine troupe. Her sweet and musical voice, and touching and interesting manner, impart wonderful charm to the character. which could not be equalled by the most experienced actress not favored with her natural advantages. Her sister, Maud, by her liveliness and grace, and the spirit and vim which she throws into her specialties, is a tions of the play. The actors who support them are all artists of ability, and selected regardless of expense, from the best theatres in the United States, for their particular adaptation to the roles they represent. Blind Tom. What is he? An enigma, a mystery. A something that no man can understand, a phenomenon no living man can explore. His performan-

No more only four, of the above numbers, striking or improbable contrast communicating in any manner could well be imagined than the grimacing, swaying, gesticulating Tom that stands waiting before an audience, and the masterful and inspired Tom seated at a piano reveling in the grandeurs of rhapsody or sonata. The subtle power, the erratic genius that holds sway over him is incomprehensible. Let him that can unravel this mystery, this creature of impulse, this mental phenomenon, do so. It cannot be done. Blind Tom appeared before a splendid audience last evening, at the Opera House, and filled a programme that ranged from Tom's own incoherent talk to the profoundest creations of Chopin, Beethoven, Liszt and other composers. The audience laughed over his simplicities, and listened with bated breath to his melodies. None would have missed it, none would miss it again. Wonderful and inexplicable Tom.-Jacksonville (Ill.) Owing to the crowded condition of the schools, the third and fourth grades have been urged as much as possible, and their grading necessarily shows a greater diversity, but all except one or two passed with credit.

The third grade in interest and partial payments, and the fourth in compound numbers sustained themselves splendidly.

The examinations in the intermediate department are all creditable, and some of them very superior. Below the seventh grade they were necessarily oral, and the results are equally creditable with the others.
