MISSISSIPPI is ahead on the question of women's rights, among the states that have lately legislated upon the subject. They do not give the right of suffrage, but husband and wife can sue each other, inherit from each other all their property, if there be no children, and, otherwise, a child's part. Women practically have the same rights as men, except that of voting. Evidently the ball is rolling very rapidly.

Two women named Goodrich, wives of the murders that were hung two years ago, dressed themselves in male attire and attempted to kill a lady in Owen county, Ky., who was supposed to be in possession of $100. The female robbers entered the house in the absence of her husband, made the attack upon the lady, and her screams brought to her assistance a peddler who had obtained permission in the evening to sleep in the barn, and at once opened upon the assassins, killing one and wounding the other. The lady of the house died before her husband returned.

FROM London under date of the 5th, we have a report of one of the most horrible calamities on record, which relates to the colliery explosion at Seaman pit in Durham county, on the North sea, about five miles south of Sunderland, at 2 o'clock that morning, which shut up and buried alive in the pit two hundred and fifty men. Every effort was being made to reach them, but up to 11 o'clock everything done in that direction proved unsuccessful. Later in the day, however, an opening had been made, which reached a group of eighteen men, who were found to be safe.

On the night of the 10th at Newark, New Jersey, four republican organizations went from Newark to parade in Harrison. At the bridge connecting the two places they were overtaken by a colored club, who were followed by a mob and asked to be protected. They were placed in the center of one of the organizations to guard them, but when they got to the bridge the crowd there began to fire into them with pistols. This created a panic among the colored men and they broke for Newark. Several persons were badly injured. One man was shot in the head, one man in the leg, another in the shoulder, and Neil Burgess was stabbed in the back. The mob created intense excitement.

THE citizens of Omaha were greatly surprised the other morning by a shock similar to an earthquake, but upon investigation it was soon ascertained that the cause of the general alarm was the explosion of the boiler in Metz's brewery, located upon the bank of South Omaha creek. Fortunately at the time of the explosion most of the employees were out of the brewery; Mr. Grieb, however, who at the time of the explosion was just passing out at the door, was caught and buried beneath a mass of brick and mortar. After the man was dug out, it was found that his left leg was broken above the knee, and his left arm above the wrist. The explosion was terrible. The boiler-head was of good half-inch iron, was folded together and blown two hundred feet, and bars of iron carried a quarter of a mile and buried five feet in the earth.

THIRTY thousand people were present at the Minneapolis track on the 5th, to witness the twenty mile running race between Miss Emma Jewett of Minnesota, and Miss Belle Cook of California, for a purse of $2,800. The plan of the race was for each lady to change her horse at the end of each mile. The scenes connected with the race were very exciting, as it was almost impossible for two men at the bits to hold the wild racers. At the word "go" the horses plunged off wildly with their fearless lady riders, amid the tumultuous shouts of the crowd. Miss Cook passed Miss Jewett on the 1st round but the latter passed under the wire ahead, while the former reined her horse close to the one in waiting, and with little help sprang from the back of one horse to the back of another and dashed off in pursuit. On the seventh mile Miss Jewett was thrown from her horse. Miss Cook passed round the track once and was awarded the purse, having made 8 miles in less than 26 minutes. Miss Jewett's leg was severely sprained but not broken. It was announced from the stand that another race would come off soon between Miss Primeo of Colorado, and Miss Cook on a ride of twelve miles, for $5,000.

IT WILL BE. The party that is not ashamed of its history, and dares to stand by the men who have made that history, will be preferred to the party which calls on the people to forget its history and its nature, and regard of the character and services of the distinguished soldier whom it has nominated for the Presidency.

GEN. Grant's head is eminently "level" on the importance of success in the present campaign, and he is ardently for Garfield and Arthur. In a recent letter to Gen. Logan he says: "I agree with you that it will not do to be beaten now. We should never be beaten until every man who counts or represents those who count in the enumeration to give representation in the electoral college, can cast his vote just as he pleases, and can have it counted just as he cast it."

DR. B. C. SNEDEKER shot R. T. Smith at Salt Lake on the 9th, the ball going through his left lung. An officer disarmed the doctor and was leading him out of a street car, where the shooting occurred, when Smith arose to his feet and fired two shots, striking the doctor in the back, the ball going through his body. Dr. Snedaker expired immediately. The particulars of the "cause of the trouble are not known, but it is believed that the doctor had been too intimate with a lady, the sister of a young lady that Smith was going to marry in two weeks. Smith has since died, and a disclosure of the true cause of the trouble probably will never be known.

HARPER'S Weekly of the 11th inst., contains two political illustrations which are not only very amusing but instructive. The first has a good likeness of Gen. Hancock, sword at side, with an elderly lady in front of him, dressed in female apparel, with a long white apron, and white cap, holding in her arms a baby, but her face, even the beard, the very picture of Ben. Butler. At the back part of the lady's likeness is printed "Beast Butler." At the feet of the likeness is printed "The widow's wants." "Well, what do you want, my sweet one? Don't be bashful."

At the top of the likeness is printed "General Butler in New Orleans order." Opposite to this and a little to the right are these words "General order No. 40, Louisiana." On the baby is printed "Rag B." Beneath is "Bay State." The other picture represents Wade Hampton on the witness stand trying to explain his Staunton speech. To his right is a rough and rugged looking southern democrat shaking his clenched fist at Wade's head and holding in his right hand behind him a revolver; near him stands Nasby as we suppose, with a bottle of whiskey in his right hand held behind his back. Just below Hampton is printed the entire extract from his Staunton speech under the caption "The War is over: Consider what Lee and Jackson would do if they were alive. These are the same principles for which they fought, for four years. Pause before you cast your vote. I ask you to remember that the principles they died for are again on trial to-day." Below the picture is printed, Wade Hampton's dilemma. Southern democrat - "If you did say it, we shall lose votes." Northern democrat - "If you did say it, we shall lose votes." At this stage of the proceedings Gen. Hancock is put on the stand, who says "The war for the union was successfully closed."

A political larriat was thrown in the State Convention to capture a supposed "dark horse," the object being to "stake him down," and prevent him from rushing headlong into Senatorial pastures. It is a fair illustration of the fact that those who are harassed with needless fears concerning Gov. Nance are continually suggesting his name in that connection, while the Governor himself is probably the most unconcerned individual in the state in regard to future promotions.

We clip the above from the Osceola News, a paper published at the Governor's old home. Some persons seem to have a notion that all political action originates in a preference for persons, losing sight of the fact that political parties grow from a sentiment, as plainly traceable as is the root of a tree. The above is the first suggestion we have seen made public that somebody was trying head off Mr. Nance as a candidate for U. S. Senator, by the introduction of the constitutional clause and the statutory law touching the subject, as a reason why the Republican State Convention should nominate a candidate. On a presidential year, and that, too, when success is regarded by all good Republicans as of vital importance to the integrity of the general government, was a fit time for politicians to do pretty much as they pleased, with reference to a very plain matter of good common sense and common judgement, but the end is not now.

The inference from the above paragraph (so far as Gov. Nance's supposed future course is concerned) would seem to be that he is not "staked down," and that he will now "rush headlong into senatorial pastures."

Is the Home News to be understood as intimating in the remotest way possible that it was Governor Nance's influence that defeated the senatorial nomination, when it was evidently the desire of the people of the state that the law be complied with? And that it was opposed on merely personal grounds, to favor the chances of an aspirant for office?
