Supper was shortly announced, and after refreshing themselves Mr. Spencer and Carrie returned to the cosy sitting room where they talked and chatted until half past eight. They were then shown to their room, which was on the second story, in a wing somewhat distant from the main portion of the house. The room was very long with a high ceiling. On the one side was a window and on the other a door. Just above the door was the bust of King George III. The room was plainly furnished, containing two Types of Western Girls.

Sitting over there in a corner of a porch, says a Chatauqua lake correspondent, is the typical Pittsburg girl. She dresses well, but not so elaborately as some of her sisters from other places; she goes in for brains, money, handsome masculine admirers and personal comfort; she s good looking or pretty, but is not beautiful, as a rule; she has a carriage or buggy at home and knows how to row and ride; she flirts with enthusiasm, and has a goodly foilowing of beaux, but she rarely marries until she is past twenty. Lazily rocking to and fro in that big chair is the Cleveland girl. She is wonderfully vivacious; her piquancy is something marvelous and electrical in its effect. She is exceedingly pretty, and frequently has the rarest kind of American beauty. She is quiet in dress, but has a style and knack in wearing her costumes here. This faculty enables her to always appear fresh and dainty, without frequent changes in apparel. She reads a great deal, talks well, firts in a dalce far niente way that is as becoming to her as her cloth robes. She is independent in opinion, knows something about politics from an Ohio standpoint. She deals frankly with the men of her acquainfance, is shy about making triends with strangers, and dances divinely. The girl who is aughing and talking rapidly with the gentleman who is promenading with her is from Columbus, Ohio. She wears a great many showy dresses, knows every body, is good hearted, easy to become acquainted with at this sort of place, talks s great deal about her school life and her conquests, and does not like the Cleveland girl. The Buffalo girl is pretty and interesting, and has ideas. She does not know how to dress well, because she admires obstrepcrous colors. She dances well, flirts as though she enjoyed it hugely, and marries a man with a great deal of money-it she can. The Indianapolis girl is jolly, affable, and kind hearted. She is moderate in her ambitions, likes autograph albums, and wears nice, tasteful dresses. The Louisville (Ky.) girl is full of dash and cim, dresses nobbily and has many marvelous suits. She has pretty southern accent and is a general favorite. One of the best types of Ohio womanhood is the Warren girl. She is modest, shy, extremely pretty, quiet, but stylish in dress, exquisite in figure, charming in face and conversation and mows down the other sex without apparent effort or desire. She is
