It is to be hoped that more of these houses will be built in the future, being so easily put up, so houses, some of them erected eight faction. A man of ordinary intelligence can construct the walls himself; hiring a carpenter and a work, and his house is completed, at much less cost than many may imagine. We are moved to speak of this matter at present because we learn from Mr. Kinney, who put up a concrete house the past summer, that he is very much pleased with it. Not having kept a strict account, he not able to give its cost, but he savs much less than $400, and it is 18x26 feet, two stories high, with the wall twelve inches thick in the first story and ten in the second. He used cement or water lime, only in the foundation. We have no he itstion in recommending this kind of house to those who contemp ite building.
