The men divested themselves of their overcoats, wrapped them around the freezing children and took them to a haystack in the immediate vicinity for shelter. When they returned for the mother, they found her dead.

-The farmer's work will be piled up in a heap, and it becomes him to do now every possible thing that the extreme lateness of the spring will allow him to do, such as getting machinery in order, etc., because the very strong probability is that when spring does come vegetation will will spring up as by magic. Jacob Ernst tells us that the year he came here, there was snow in the bluffs north of Columbus, on the 26th day of May, and that the season was a very prolific one, everything planted growing rapidly and producing very abundantly. Mr. Anderson's advice in this week's Journal is in all respects good, but some of it, respecting farm work in Feb. and March, is scarcely applicable this year, unless, indeed, the remaining days of this month should be extraordinarily warm and fine.
