Written for the Journal. COME AGAIN, DEAR DREAM. MRS. MARY B. FINCH.

O silent dream of summer flowers In sunny vales and shady bowers, And meadow grass among;

On mossy banks they wave and gleam; Their purple bills hang o'er the stream, And toss in every breeze;

I wander in an olden town Whose crumbling walls and turrets frown

On silent streets and lone; But journey sadly as I may I find sweet flowers beside the way,

And wind the hillside green. Sometimes a hedgehog comes between, With waxen leaves of darkest green,

Again I am a happy child Roaming the woodland's rocky wild

The wise may sneer, and yet I tell The dream that pleases me so well

Come, then, with me in mystic dreams, I seek the hills and fishing streams

THE MUSKIE'S REQUEST. A bright fireside, with fender and fire-irons shining like gold, windows

Almost, we say, but never quite; For Lucy Milford had learned the lesson of household economy, and it

'If we were only rich,' thought Lucy to herself, as she glanced across the room.

'I suppose I can have as many servants as I please now?' hazarded Mrs. Milford, wisely steering the conversational barque away from the shoals of dispute.

'And a housekeeper, like Mrs. Miller's?'

'You will not, my dear—not in my house.'

'You don't want me to have anything I want!'

'Why do you say Brighton?' gravely questioned Merton. 'To my mind, Brighton is nothing more than a hot-bed of folly and frippery.'

'I don't care for Hastings,' said Lucy, moodily; 'the air never did agree with me.'

'Merton, Merton!' cried the wife, 'where are you going?'

'To the billiard-room at the corner,' said Milford, hotly. 'I can find friends enough there, I dare say, to give me the sympathy my wife seems inclined to withhold.'

'Lucy cried bitterly. In all the bright years of their married life they never had any serious differences until now. Was it possible that riches were destined to bring them only a need of misery, instead of the expected harvest of happiness? Next came a feeling of bitterness and resentment. She would show Merton that she was not to be treated like a child.'

'He came home late, but Mrs. Milford feigned to be asleep. She did not come down to breakfast the next morning, making an excuse of a slight headache, the remains of last night's tears, and Milford ate and drank alone.'

'Humph!' commented he, swallowing his coffee in a succession of dyspeptic-breeding gulps. 'A pretty of money!' 'That at least. We shall be rich people, puss.'

'Oh, Merton, it scarcely seems possible! It's like a dream.'

'It's a dream that has a pretty solid vein of reality running through it, you'll find, my dear,' said the husband.

'And just before you came in, I was sitting here and thinking what I would do and how I could ornament my home, if only we were rich!' cried Lucy, clapping her hands.

Merton pinched her cheek and laughed complacently. Evidently he was in the best of humor.

'Half a million, Lucy!' said he. 'You shall have a set of diamonds that will rival those of Mrs. Merrill, the banker's wife, and a real cashmere shawl. And I'll order a pony phaeton for your own driving, and you—'

'But we shall buy a country place, shan't we, Merton?' wistfully asked Lucy, the soft carmine shadows deepening over her cheek.

'A country place! What for?' said Milford, a little contemptuously. 'What on earth should we bury ourselves in the country for, when we can buy a place at the West End, and surround ourselves with all the refinement of city life?'

'A shade of acute disappointment came over Lucy's face.'

'Oh, Merton, I have always dreamed of a country house,' sighed she.

'With burglars and mildew and spiders thrown in, eh? No sense, my dear, nonsense! The city is the place to live in.'

'And we can have papa and mamma to live with us, can't we?'

'W—well, I don't know exactly about that,' said Milford, thoughtfully, stroking his mustache; 'I'll buy 'em a snug little place, if you say so, my love; but I never did believe in fathers and mothers-in-law living with their children. Every household is complete in itself. That's my notion.'

'Oh, Merton, how can you talk so?' cried Lucy, with a pained face.

'Oh, well, Lucy, there's no use in sentimentalizing on these points,' retorted her husband a little brusquely.

'I don't care to be rich, if I can't enjoy the pleasure of my money,' said Mrs. Milford, pouting.

'So you may enjoy them, if you only will be reasonable about it.'

'Better leave off thinking about it, then,' said Milford, lighting a cigar and leaning back in a chair, the better to enjoy it.

'I suppose I can have as many servants as I please now?' hazarded Mrs. Milford, wisely steering the conversational barque away from the shoals of dispute.

'Twenty, if you like, my dear,' replied Merton.

'And a housekeeper, like Mrs. Miller's?'

'Not a housekeeper,' said Mr. Milford, shaking his head. 'No fine ladies for me, disguised as dependents. As many servants as are necessary, but no one to domineer over them—a proxy for yourself.'

'I will have a housekeeper,' said Lucy, excitedly.

'No you will not, my dear—not in my house.'

'You don't want me to have anything I want!'

'Why do you say Brighton?' gravely questioned Merton. 'To my mind, Brighton is nothing more than a hot-bed of folly and frippery.'

'I don't care for Hastings,' said Lucy, moodily; 'the air never did agree with me.'

'Merton, Merton!' cried the wife, 'where are you going?'

'To the billiard-room at the corner,' said Milford, hotly. 'I can find friends enough there, I dare say, to give me the sympathy my wife seems inclined to withhold.'

sort of life this.' For three days Lucy cried and Merton sulked. At the end of that time he came home with a curious expression on his face.

'Puss,' said he. Lucy looked up at the old, censorious face brightening at the old, pensive face name.

'I've just had a second telegram. Uncle Jesse is dead.'

'Poor old man,' said Lucy, soberly. 'Do you know, Merton, I begin to doubt whether Uncle Jesse's money will do us any good.'

'I don't think it will,' said Milford, 'because you see the old gentleman rallied at the last, and made a new will in favor of the Refuge for Old Men.'

'And there is nothing left for us?' queried Lucy.

'Not a penny,' answered Merton. 'I am glad of it,' said Lucy.

'And I don't know that I am sorry,' said Merton, half laughing, 'because, if the reverse of the old adage holds true, and love flies out of the window when riches come in at the door, I say let's draw the bolt against riches.'

And Lucy's tearful kiss sealed his words.

The Meaning of It. Senator Mahone has made a statement to Charles Nordhoff, in answer to the democratic charges of bargaining with the republicans. He states that he was kindly asked his wishes by members of both parties, no one making any improper approach to him and nothing being done or proposed in the way of an arrangement. He is, as he has been from the first, absolutely uncommitted to either party, and means to remain so. As to the committee, he was assigned by the democratic caucus to membership in four committees of equal dignity with those to which he was assigned in the republicans, with this difference, that by the latter he is assigned to the chairmanship of a committee of minor importance. As to the results of the debate, Senator Mahone expresses himself as more than satisfied. He has been able to satisfy the country that his scheme of the readjustment of the state is fair and honorable. His chief pleasure and satisfaction, however, relate to the fact that the country's attention has been drawn to the intolerant, violent, proscriptive spirit shown by the bourbon democratic senators in this debate. On this point, Senator Mahone says: 'I have been surprised at myself; but it deserves the attention of men of both parties everywhere. When such a spirit is shown here in the open daylight of the senate, what must it be in the southern states, and were I not a senator, and the object of it, but the poor, ignorant, weak and helpless among the voters, white and black? Bourbon intolerance hereafter needs no description. The senate debate shows in its mildest and least tyrannical form. Every freeman and every man who wants a free ballot can judge for himself what it must be where it is exercised unchecked by the forms and restraints of the senate, and by the publicity of legislative proceedings. The debate, in my judgment, has been of the greatest use to the country.'—Omaha Republican.

THE SECRET.—'I noticed,' said Dr. Franklin, 'a mechanic among others, at work on a house erecting but a little way from my office, who always appeared to be in a merry humor, who had a kind word and cheerful smile for every one he met. Let the day be ever so cold, gloomy or sunless, he happy soiled, danced like a sunbeam on his cheerful countenance. Meeting him one morning, I asked him to tell me the secret of his happy flow of spirits.'

'My secret, Doctor,' he replied, 'is that I have got one of the best of wives, and when I go to work she always has a kind word of encouragement for me, and when I go home she meets me with a smile and a kiss, and then tea is ready, and she has done so many little things through the day to please me, that I can not find it in my heart to speak an unkind word to anybody.'

'What an influence, then, hath woman over the heart of man, to soften it and make the fountain of cheerful and pure emotions! Speak gently, then; a happy smile and a kind word of greeting, after the toils of the day are over, cost nothing, and go far toward making a home happy and peaceful.'

A Nevada miner with a termagant wife has this to say:—'I used to believe that the further I got down into the bowels of the earth the nearer I was to the infernal regions, but now it's just the reverse of that belief, for the nearer to home I come the hotter it is for me.'
