A LARGE number of cattle have recently died at Council Bluffs, and parties living near Elkhorn station lost about forty head in one night last week. No one has been able to define the disease or explain what produces it, but the better opinion and almost universal belief is that it is caused by some kind of vegetable eaten. Those who have witnessed the death of some of the cattle say that just before death they feebly stagger about or stand still, quivering with tremors, succeeded by jerkings of the limbs, rigid spasms, and death. The citizens of Council Bluff's have become so excited about the disease and death of cattle that they decline to use milk or beef, at the present writing.
