THE GIRL STOOD MOTIONLESS, watching him as he strode away—watching him vault upon his horse, his tall, superb figure showing to such splendid advantage, watching horse and rider as they cantered out of

OUT ON THE LAKE. Wide open blue eyes, fringed with jetty lashes—a little slender nose—a mouth fit for queen Titania—white brow, on which clustered rings of gold, in a fasciation of disorder—a cheek exquisitely fair, with tint upon it of the sea shell—two little soft, helpless hands—two little, slippered feet, and you have the picture before Roydon Howard's gaze, and the inventory successively dotted down by him in his mental diary.

'Awfully pretty,' was the verdict rendered. 'Absolutely good for nothing. Ah, if life were all summer such women would make perfect wives.'

An audible sigh followed the latter thought of this most grave philosopher; a sigh so deep, so profound that it startled the girl from her reverie.

'A penny for your thoughts,' Major, she said in a low, musical voice. The voice suited her, it was like all else about Fay Cichings—in perfect attune.

'You bid too low,' answered the man; 'and yet too high, since you ask upon a subject of whose reply you must be conscious. You forget that, spending the last hour in your society, my thoughts could not wander far.'

'But you sigh. Must I hold myself responsible for the sigh, too? I fear so. In remembering that my furlough is rapidly slipping away, and that within a month I must join my regiment on the plains, leaving my charming companion of this morning. Do you still bid a penny to inquire into a thing so deep as a sigh?'

The color deepened a little on the beautiful cheek.

'His charming companion of the morning.' This was how he regarded her—this man, whose brave deeds had preceded him, until, before meeting, had assigned him something akin to hero-worship.

A little sharp stab of pain shot through her heart, but she smiled bravely.

'All that was scarcely worth a sigh from you,' she said. 'It is never those who go amid new scenes who feel most keenly the parting, but rather those who are left behind, and say, "Yesterday he sat here," or "Yesterday he heard his laugh," or perchance find a glove that he has dropped, or a cigar half smoked—to them it is something felt, something tangible.'

'Do you think so? Does the sand sigh for the retreating wave when already one coming claims its welcome? I should be glad to feel that Miss Fay sometimes gave me a thought among the many new aspirants for the hour she has sometimes bestowed on me. A soldier's life has many charms, spite of his hardships, and there is some fascination, spite of its pain, in the long, solitary musings he holds sitting at the door of his tent, where, instead of the plain stretching before him, he views the mental panorama of his past. I'm afraid mine will confine itself to one figure. Can you guess whose, Miss Fay?'

There was an instant's pause—an instant when something stirred within Roydon Howard's heart, prompting the impulse to cry out: 'Who but yours? Make imagination but a reality! Come with me! Share a soldier's life, and let our mutual love smooth the rough places!'

But scarcely was it born that he strangled it. He had no reason to suppose that this girl cared for him; but even so, at least it was but a passing fancy.

And in time of real danger where would she be? How would she fit him to ride forth to meet a foe? Either with hysterical weeping or a swoon. No, no! Here under the green trees, in a ball-room, at the head of a luxurious dinner table, such women were charming enough to turn a man's brain; but in moments of peril, when death, no longer clothed in the poet's rhythm, stalked before them, bare and ungainly, it was little wonder that they fled shrieking from his grim presence.

Therefore the pause lasted an instant only; then Roydon answered his own question with a laugh.

'I declare I am almost growing sentimental. If in anybody's presence but yours, Miss Fay, I should apologize for so unwonted a mood. But you are wholly responsible for it, and it must be with you so old a story to inspire it that I will not waste the words. By the way, there is my horse. I had no idea it was late. Au revoir. Remember, I have the first and last walizes this evening.'

sight, the latter turning first to give a farewell salute with his whip.

'So, in scarce a moment, will he ride out of my life,' she murmured to herself with white lips. 'Oh, Roydon, is it that you are too proud to ask me to share the peril and privations of a soldier's life, or that it would give you no pleasure to have me share it?'

'Will you go out on the lake with me this afternoon, Miss Fay?' asked Major Howard, a week later. 'It looks a little squally, but we will keep close to shore, so as to run home if the clouds thicken.'

'Of course I will come,' assented Fay, 'and as to the clouds, don't watch them too closely. I rather like storms.'

'What a perfect picture she makes!' thought Roydon, as he promptly, at the appointed time, assisted her into the sail-boat he had named in her honor, the yachting dress of blue fitting closely to the exquisitely outlined figure, and on the golden braids nestled a coquettish sailor hat. Fifteen minutes later a splendid breeze had carried them far out into the lake.

'The storm has concluded to postpone itself in our special favor,' said Roydon, glancing up at the blue sky, 'or perhaps they don't think soldiers should be too severely tried as sailors. Which is it, Miss Fay?'

'Do you appeal to me as the spirit of the storm cloud? If so, I shall call on it to avenge me.'

He answered simply by a look, but it caused her eyes to droop.

She stretched her little white hand down to the water's edge, watching the current resist as the boat sped onward.

'So,' he mused, 'am I resisting the voice of my heart; so must I resist to the end.'

They spoke but little. They were alone and together—around them water, above them the sky, beneath them a grave. And both were young and in each heart the same voice was speaking, yet their lips were sealed. Thus an hour passed, when suddenly Roydon tacked.

'What are you doing?' cried Fay in a tone of disappointment. 'Surely we're not going home?'

'I wish we were already there,' answered her companion with a blanched cheek, just as a little breath of wind, fresher than any they had felt, blew upon them. 'Don't be frightened, Miss Fay,' continued Roydon, assuringly. 'It's one of these treacherous squalls. We're in for it, but I'll do the best I can.'

'Can't I help you?'

The man glanced up amazed. She neither cried nor groaned. There was no tremor in her tone. His cheek was whiter than hers.

'Pshaw! she did not realize the danger,' he said, mentally. 'Can you hold this?' handing her a rope as he spoke.

The next moment the squall struck them. The little yacht lay fully on its side, then righted itself.

Fay's lips were a little pale now, but no sound escaped them, only she had held so tightly to the rope, spite of his resistance, that it had already cut into the tender flesh.

The storm was now fully upon them. It was fierce as it was sudden. They were drenched with water. They could no longer see each other for the spray.

'Fay,' cried Roydon, 'you are frightened.'

'With you?' she answered. 'No,' and her tone was firmer than his own.

The next moment the boat, struck by a sharper blast than first, went over. Both found themselves clinging to its sides.

'Fay, tell me,' he said, 'that you forgive me for this. Oh, child, must we die when life holds so much sweetness?'

'The storm won't last long. We may yet be saved,' she answered, in her sweet young voice, 'but Roydon, if I slip, don't try to save me. It will only lose two lives, and mine is not worth as much as yours.'

'My God! without you, what would mine be?'

The words escaped him ere he realized their meaning.

'Live it, then, for my sake, dear,' Fay replied, 'and remember, always, had I my choice, I would have chosen to have died thus with you than to have lived in without you. My love, good-bye.'

The next instant the waters had caught her torn and bleeding hands, all cut by the rope, from their slight hold; but Major Howard had spoken words with no idle meaning when he had asked her what his life would be worth without her.

Quick as the current in its hungry greed for its beautiful prey, he threw about her his protecting arm. Then, as though heaven smiled, the winds ceased as suddenly as they had risen, and the sun burst forth from its hiding place, showing the rescue which was bearing down upon them.

'May I see you, if but for five minutes?' were the words scrawled on the card Fay held a few hours later, in her bandaged hands, as she lay upon the couch, very pale and exhausted, but with a heart full of gratitude for her wonderful escape, awaiting him who had penned the words.

How well she knew the quick, impatient step which heralded his coming. Her cheek flushed as he strode impetuously into the room.

'I could not sleep before seeing you,' he said. 'My brave girl! how little I knew you! I thought because you were beautiful there could be no courage in your soul; that because your hands were small and soft and white, they could have no strength. Dear little hands, taking them tenderly in his own, "They helped to save our lives to-day, Fay, will you give them to me, darling? Will you be a soldier's wife, and teach him, my own sweet love, some of the bravery that only such women as you can teach to men?'

A great light shone in the beauties upraised to his.

'I owe you my life,' she whispered. 'If a debt so rich will receive payment so poor, take it, Roydon; it is yours.'

Intellectual Women.

Much of the old prejudice against intellectual women remains, because the average man continues to regard them as inseparable from bookish dowdies and pedantic egotists, from tumbled hair, soiled cuffs and personal inelegance. He has not learned that intellect no longer expresses itself—in truth it ever did—in such form and fashion. He may have an intellectual wife and be ignorant of the fact, since she fails to discuss Greek roots and conic sections, and since she fully appreciates the advantages of clothes. His romantic devotion to her is proverbial; and he rejoices in the consciousness that he loves, often years after marriage, more than he loved her on their wedding day. He never imagines that he is under the permanent spell of her intellect, and there are thousands of men of his nebulous intelligence. The woman who knows how to use her intellect has a guarantee for the final loyalty of her lover or husband. He may swerve or wander, but she can be patient and undisturbed; the forces of her mind, working at a distance, will in due time bring the truant, contrite and chagrined, to her ever-welcome arms.

The intellectual woman, properly balanced, is, in all the relations of life, the best and longest loved, and is always most genial and attractive. He who declares that he detests intellectual women simply means that he detests the ostentation of intellect, the self-consciousness of undigested information. When he meets a really intellectual woman, he is likely to think her charming from lack of intellect. He is too biased to comprehend that it is her intellect that gives her charm. If most men who are still in love with their wives could make the last analysis of their fascination, they would be pretty certain to find its chief source to be a harmonious intellect.

It must be acknowledged that Senator Van Wyck is reasonably prompt in fulfilling his promises and contracts made during the Senatorial fight last winter. One of his latest appointments is that of Hon. Thomas Graham, the Democratic State Senator from this county, as Deputy United States Surveyor. It will be remembered by the people of this county that it was predicted during the campaign last fall that in the event of Mr. Graham's election, he would vote on the first two or three ballots for the Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator, after which he would cast his vote for whoever the bolting element of the Republican party in this county wanted him to. How well that prediction has been verified is well known.

Much has been said by the leaders in this bolting movement about "methods," "political machines," "rings," "slates," &c., and the promise of offices for services rendered, and here we have an exemplification of the very thing they harped on so much—a regular, plain bargain and sale beforehand. It was known to many at the time of Mr. Van Wyck's election that Mr. Graham was to have this appointment in consideration of his vote for Van Wyck, and the Blade gave a hint of it over two months ago.

It is all right for Van Wyck to make his promise good to Mr. Graham. If this is not "machine politics," pray tell us what it is, and what will his Democratic friends think of this kind of trading? But such is politics in the far west—Seward Blade.

Still Another Comet.

Prof. Swift, Director of the Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., has just verified the discovery of another comet, in the Constellation of Auriga, made July 14th, by Prof. J. M. Schaeberle, of Ann Arbor, Mich. This new comet is apparently coming directly toward the earth, and, for a telescopic comet, is very bright; indeed, it can readily be seen with a good opera glass. It is quite remarkable that it should be in just the spot where the present large comet was first seen by the naked eye in this latitude; and it shows that the two bodies must have crossed each other's paths. This makes the fourth comet discovered within ten weeks, a circumstance heretofore unknown in history. Prof. Schaeberle has duly filed his application for the Warner prize of $200, and as yet he is the only claimant.
