THE THREE-TOOTHED RAKE.

I suppose the girls of Millburn would all resent the imputation if I should say that any of them envied little Phebe Bird when she set up housekeeping with Ridgway Dayton on the finest farm the country afforded, in a house that was in thorough repair and fully furnished. It was an establishment to be proud of, and people said if that young couple did not prosper it would be their own fault.

"There, Ridge," said Uncle Aleck, "is your farm and stock and house all paid for, and now I shall do no more for you. If you don't hoe out your row you'll have to starve. I am going abroad, so I sha'n't be coming around to advise you and scold you, and I expect it will come pretty tough with you for awhile. But Phebe is a sensible girl, I am happy to say, and I think I leave you in pretty good hands."

Ridge secretly felt rather pleased at the prospect of being "left," but he did not say so. Uncle Aleck was an excellent man to provide, but he was a little sharp in his way, as the young man had occasion to know at times in his juvenile years. The old gentleman himself had been reared under a system which might be formulated in the old couplet:

"A boy, a dog and a walnut tree,

The more you thrash them the better they be."

The system had been greatly toned down in the case of his orphaned nephew, but Ridge thought it strict enough.

His choice of a wife had pleased his uncle as well as himself, for Phebe was a very domestic girl as well as a cultivated one, and it was the general verdict that "both had done well." Still Aunt Cynthia did tell Ridgway she wished he had got a wife who would make him stand around a little more.

"Oh, she'll make me stand around enough," laughed Ridge. "You need not be concerned about that."

"She'll have need to," said Aunt Cynthia, nodding her head sagaciously. She had known his manner of life from his youth up, and said he was always a very good boy if he only had a steady hand with him to keep him in order. But Ridge believed 'aunts and uncles never did appreciate a fellow.' Now it was white while to have the worshipping direction of such a sweet, appreciative little soul as Phebe Bird's, and he did think himself a lucky fellow, and he was.

A stout, capable hired man was engaged at the outset, who understood his business, and, appropriately, received good wages. So the cares of life sat very lightly on the young farmer's shoulders, though he felt the responsibility of Atlas when he shouldered the world, having not only his own, but his wife's domain to look after.

Just when the serpent entered into this little Eden could not distinctly be told. I have no doubt he "wired in and wired out," among the vines and shrubbery of that "first garden," for sometime before he presented himself to our first mother.

If Ridgway was a little exacting and very particular, Phebe was very self-sacrificing and painstaking; so there was little jar in the machinery. He thought strict order and system about work a very excellent thing—for other people—especially for a man's wife. Breakfast at seven, dinner at twelve and supper at six, always on the table at the minute, was his standard, but of course if he could not be on hand just at that time, it was only necessary to keep things hot and at their best for a half or three-quarters of an hour, and it would be nice for her to fill up the time with sewing, or some little thing of
