A Sad, Impressive Scene.

NEW YORK, September 20 .- The Herald's postscript has the following: The death-bed scene of the president was a scene peculiarly sad and impressive As soon as the doctors felt there was no longer any hope the members of the family assembled, Dr. Bliss stood at the head of the bed with his hand on the pulse of the patient and consulted senators and representatives waiting in low whispers with Dr. Agnew. The private secretary stood on the opposite side of the bed with Mrs. Garfield at the bedside, she at times leaning on his arm. Mrs. Lulu Rockwell and Miss Mollie Garfield came into the room at the time the president lost consciousness. Afterward they went into the hall, the door of which remained open, and waited there. What conversation was had was conducted in whispers. Those about the bed occasionally went into corners of the room and spoke to each other. The solemnity of the occasion impressed itself upon them. There was no sound heard except gasping for breath of the sufferer, whose changing color gave indications of the near approach of the end. After he had repeated "It hurts" he passed into a state of unconsciousness, breathing heavily at times, and then giving a slight indication that breath was still in his any found in other organs except body. The only treatment given was hypodermic injections of brandy by Dr. Agnew, assisted by Dr. Boynton. Occasionally they spoke with Dr. Bliss in quiet whispers. The president suffered no pain. Afthe rotunds, and the cold, still face | ter a time he placed his hand upon his heart. He passed away almost quietly. The time between life and death was marked by no physical exhibition nor any word. The intervals between gasping became desire not again to see the white longer, and presently there was no sound. Every one present knew death had come quickly, without pain. When it became evident that he was dead, Mrs. Rockwell placed and desperate assault, has finally her arm around Mrs. Garfield and culminated in a national disaster, led from the room. She attered no

An abscess cavity, six inches by four in dimensions, was found in the vicinity of the gall bladder, between the liver and transverse colon, which were strongly interadherent. It did not involve the substance of the liver and no it and the wound. A long suppuration channel extended from the external wound between the loin and muscles and the right kidney almost to the right groin. This channel is now known to be due to burrowing of the pus from the wound. It was supposed during life to be the track of the ball. On examination of the chest organs evidence of severe bronchitis were found on both sides with broncho pneumonia of the lower portion of the right lung, and it is thought a much less extent of the left. The lungs contained no abscesses, and the heart no clots.
