-Next to the mental exaltation of the genius who conceives an excellent drama, must be the intellectual delight of the successful actor who, as a medium of exchange of thought, delivers the sentiment of the author, with the full force and meaning of every phrase, to an appreciative audience. Third in this train of pure intellectual delights comes that of those who listen, whose pleasure is only exceeded by that of the actor and the author. -It is bardly ever safe to make predictions or even statements concerning Nebraska weather, in weekly paper, but it seems at this writing (Saturday evening) that the rainy weather which has for so many days been prevalent in Iowa and Illinois has extended its area to include Nebraska. The rain and moisture is rather warm, grass is growing, and things have a kind of "springish" appearance. There is clipped its wings equally and turned no telling, however, what a day may bring forth-the next blast that sweeps from the north may bring snow and plenty of it. If so, where again will the stock shelters be for the winter?

-Judge W. S. Geer spent several days in Nance county last week. He has become quite enamored of the same, and has even purchased some land there. He has an interest in forty acres near the mouth of the Cedar, and stretching from the Cedar to the Loup, in which, at a depth of six feet from the surface, they have discovered a bed of what is called the Kansas chalk stone. It is said to be an excellent building stone, as readily sawed and planed as wood is, but with exposure to the air becomes very hard. The Judge has a nice specimen of the stone at his office in this city, which may be seen there by those who are interested in the development of Nebraska's natural resources. The idea of a local, weekly newspaper costing too much is too absurd to think of. A glass of beer once a week, or a drink of whiskey less: Mrs. Kendall have always had a Barnum, who is an exceptionally one cigar less a week; one game of billiards less every three weeks, and lumbus, and will no doubt be well first time it would be different, but many another little personal expatronized this time. A very intelligent man has just been talking to us about these things, and said that nearly a year ago when he determined to give up his cigars, which, (for himself and others whom he treated) were costing him about $1 a day, his wife concluded to get along without a bired girl; then of course they could do and did do with less house room, bringing down their rent from eighteen dollars a month to twelve and a half. Naively, he remarked to us, "my wife didn't know how much my cigars had cost me-she thought she was making a sacrifice equal to mine,

See Him Double.

Occasionally it happens that the newspapers pick up a joke on some unsuspecting citizen, but it very rarely happens that such jokes are double. In the ordinary "course of human events," one joke at a time is about as much as it is supposed that the average man can carry and bear up under, and, as a rule, the Jour-NAL is accustomed (perhaps more a little than it ought to be) to let these things go, but local news is a little scarce just at this present writing, and we are under no special obligations to keep quiet on this occasion. One of our hunters went out one day last week, and seeing a flock of geese in the air, shot at it. We didn't hear whether anything fell or not, but the inference is that the flock was so near to cover that he didn't know for sure whether he had killed a goose, but supposed that he had. Anyhow, he walked toward where he saw a goose fluttering, and seeing a young granger lad standing by and trying to gather in the game, he shouted and swore at him furiously to lay down that goose-that it was his. "It isn't yours," said the boy. "Blank, blank you it is mine, and you lay it down or I'll-you." "Now, look here," said the boy, "this trap is mine, and in it I have caught this goose, and of course the goose is mine." Our hunter saw that he was in for it, but told the boy that he must have the bird for a decoy, and literally bulldozed it away from the boy for a quarter. After bringing his game home, he shall Smith's. it out to graze. The last he saw of the noble bird, it was making good its escape, with downy wings, and our hunter didn't have time to run after his gun. Julius Rasmussen of this city has fitted up a branch establishment at Duncan, on the U. P. railroad, where can be found, at all times and at reasonable prices, a splendid line of groceries, staple and fancy, canned fruits, etc., in short, such goods as are generally kept in a first-class Nebraska grocery. Julius is well known as an enterprising and square dealer. Call and see his goods.
