Guiteau. Charles J. Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield was hanged in pursuance of the judgment and order of the court, within the prison walls at Washington City, D. C., Friday, June 30th, '82, at 12:40 o'clock, by Warden Crocker.

There was a slight rattle as the bolt was drawn. The trap fell and his person suddenly shot downward and came to a stop with a terrible jerk. The rope creaked as it stretched, but it stood the test. A shout arose on the outside of the jail, but all inside was silent. The figure which a moment before was above the platform, was now dangling below it, swinging slowly around. The knees were convulsively lifted two or three times, but otherwise no sign of a struggle could be seen. After turning half way round several times the body became still, with the face toward the west. At the expiration of three minutes the body was lowered far enough so that the physicians, Drs. Young and McDonald, could feel the pulse extinct for fully seventeen minutes. At 1:15 o'clock the body was lowered into the coffin, which had been placed directly below it. His right hand was placed over his breast and the left arm along his side. The black cap was taken off and persons who remained in the corridor were permitted to file by and look at the face. It looked natural though it had the hue of death. A slight stream of froth was issuing from the mouth and nose. Around the neck was a slight discoloration, produced by the noose, but that was all. After the body was viewed, the lid was put on the coffin and six men carried it up stairs into the prison chapel, where autopay

Mrs. Leatherby was knocked down by a hailstone. G. B. Darlington and G. M. Van Vorce each had a cow killed. H. W. Kennard picked up a pan full of hailstones which averaged the size of goose eggs. Hailstones went through the roof of Geo. Mickey's corn crib-inch boards. Peter Adrian's house near Brainard was blown down, his two children, a boy and girl, killed, and the parents so injured that death is imminent.

At Rising, houses were unroofed and blown from their foundations. The dwelling of John Boans was blown from its foundation, and Mrs. B. had her ankle broken by a falling chimney. Southeast of Rising huge chunks of ice were sent through the roofs of a number of houses. Hailstones as large as a pint cup fell to the depth of 8 or 10 inches. [Near this place occurred the catastrophe to Mr. Adrian and family, mentioned elsewhere-the right side of his face, even to the part of a bone, was torn away his lower jaw was mashed into jelly. In the eastern part of the county on the farm of J. T. McKnight the hail was found in drifts two and a half feet deep the next morning, 24 hours after the storm. The crops are almost wholly destroyed through the center of the belt over which the storm passed, while either side i more or less injured.
