  - -Considering the importance of the interests involved, it is a wonder that the bawdy houses of the town have not been permanently closed. Good government, decency, good morals family peace and individual happi ness all concur in bringing about this result. Untold evil has already been done here, such as can never be rem edied; we are informed that even young boys (who are generally ready to ape the bad deeds of their elders. and who seem much more susceptible to the influence of bad than of good example) have been corrupted in body and soul. While we do not close and confidential intimacy with their sons and daughters that would induce the latter to make them confidantes in matters of affection. There is nothing more important with the young than the formation of character, and this lesson should be inculcated at every opportunity, for if anything numan is valuable, for time and for eternity, it is character. Those who engage in criminal practices of any kind are undermining their good character, destroying their health, making themselves not only unfit but incapable of true friendship, dishon-

- William Smith, a plasterer, lives near the Loupe river, opposite Lost Creek station, and ten miles west or Columbus. On the night of the storm there were in the house, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, two daughters, Mary Ann and Harriett, two younger daughters, and

The daughters slept up stairs, at the

- south end of the story and a half house, the two younger on the east side, the two older on the west side, a window being between the two beds. The storm coming up, the older daughter, Mary Ann, got up and closed the window and lay down again. In a very short time afterwards, the house was struck at the south end, shattering every studding but one and tearing off the plastering and siding. All the members of the family were more or less stunned and unconscious, Mrs. Smith being the first to recover consciousness, when it was found that Mary Ann was dead, and Harriet blind-a fearful black mark across the eyes. Harriet did no become conscious for an hour and a

- were not seriously injured. There were two tall trees near branches of which hung over the house. One was struck, some of the leaves being scorched. The metal on a sewing machine and an accordeon was melted. A gun in one of the rooms was struck and the wood-work on it shattered, but the gun was not discharged.
- The remains of the daughter, Mary Aun (aged 18 years and 6 months), were followed to their resting place in the Columbus Cemetery Saturday last, by a large number of friends. - - J. W. Early, Esq., Co. Treasurer, in his recent trip to Lincoln, paid over into the state treasury $6,016.21; on the 2d of May he paid over $7,543.80, and on the 5th of January last $3,-358 52, making in all, this year, so far, in Mr. Blood striking Garten a terri- $16,918.53. He tells us that the valuation of property in Platte is away out of proportion with the remainder of the state, and that a reduction could easily be effected. He thinks it could be reduced one-third. There is something radically wrong with our whole system of revenue. While the law requires property to be assessed for its cash value, it is a notorious truth that this provision is a dead letter, and the assessors are each virtually left to his own sweet will, whatever that may be, and hence it happens that in one precinct of a county property may be assessed at one-fifth its cash value while in an--- Norfolk Journal: A little game city, whose advertisements made it other it is one-fourth or one-third, and the same state of affairs may exist as between different counties in the state. The game, however, was Nance, and other notables, with a other property is assessed at five millions, while Platte, with perhaps about one-fourth as much property, is assessed at $2,200,000, which is not the fair thing. When he puts his arguments in such language as ordinary mortals can understand, if brother Gerrard is unable to meet them, I know a woman or two who will try to help him out. It is really too bad to call on Mr. Gerrard, here in the middle of July, to wrestle with such a sentence as

    - JAMES PEARSALL.

- For the Journal.
- Suffrage. "Quirks and Quibbles have no part
- in the search for Truth." Mr. Pierce says, "compact" savors of nullification. Townsend's analysis says our present constitution is compact of the people.
- Pierce says, "The truth is, moral obligation is not in any degree contingent upon consent." If his wife had not consented to marriage with him would she be under any moral obligation as his wife? Then, is it not the truth that the whole obliga- of 314 hours. tion was contingent upon her consent?
- Webster says, Law is the appointed rule of a state for the control of its inhabitants. Mr. Pierce says human laws are only for the government of men who do not recognize moral olaims. He admits that men are kings, and ridicules the idea of making woman queen by making her equal with man. Thus we find him at variance with authority or common sense every time he seeks an argument to sustain the statement that the "ballot represents physical power alone."
- He says that I have failed to prove the contrary. He cannot prove that the moon is not made of green cheese. and we do not ask a man to prove a negative when the assertion has no basis in common sense. But I will try to make it so plain that he need not err therein. My ballot represents me, my conclusion, intellectual and moral. When counted, it counts for

- me. My share in the result goes on through eternity, and I am responsible for the choice or conclusion. It ie my "say" in a government that holds out a thousand rewards to govern, to one threat of punishment for those who refuse to be governed. We do not physically hold the hand of the thief so he cannot steal-we make a law to govern him and if he will not
- Now, so far as the ballot represents any other thing than the punishment of those who refuse to be governed, it does not represent physical force, and when Mr. Pierce says "moral power is a higher power than physical, and more truly dominant, he only needs to look in Webster to find that he has given his third proposition away, for dominant means governing, and if the ballot is dominant it must more truly represent moral power
- than physical. When he attempts to divide man up and say he is so much moral, so much intellectual, so much physical, then says the controling man is physical alone, he verges toward the abourd. Whilst he is studying this question, having commenced perhaps with Greek and Latin, when he gets down toward the a-b-c, let me commend a few political maxims to his notice that have the American savor:
- lst. The just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed.
- the rights of all persons are not Lauck's. equally protected, is organized injus-3d. Under a genuine Republican

- Next. The Omaha Bee says that the Mormon women vote the tickets put into their hands, and intimates that the womanly woman anywhere would follow their example. If he points the women of his acquaintance to the polygamous Mormons for an example, few of the Nebraska people will desire him for an educator. I once heard a woman in Utah say: "I all work warranted. told my husband he ought not to let me go there"-and her companion replied, "well its my father's business | nold's Jewelry Store.
- to keep me straight, so I'll go," thus disclaiming any responsibility for their conduct. Though this may seem very womanly to the editor of the Bee. civilized society teaches woman to keep her own conscience. Then his argument about sustaining the decision of the ballot by the power of arms amounts to a muscular qualification for the vote, and the question arises how muscular must be be. If we fix the standard high we would be compelled to turn over the government men with strength of the large negro Curry It appears to me that when men have so low an idea of government by the people as to wish to make it depend on a physical qualifi-
- cation, thus degrading our government to the standard of no government. (See maxim No. four.) It is is time for them to consider whether the people would not be benefitted by having them change places as voters with some short-haired, crackedbrained, half-witted women, on the
