-The editor of the North Bend Flail is not altogether happy, even quarters, the campaign fund was ate investment in land, while rather thinner than the Flail appetite food provided for every mouth which came into the world, but the Flail does not seem to be pleased with the share that was voucheafed to it; at least we must believe that the following wail means something to the purmerchandise store at Leigh, Colfax pose, which can only be on the supposition that the word "lavishes" privilege of doing:

"O give me back my native lands, That flow with milk and honey; Or where old Hubbell stoutly stands, And lavishes his money."

Flail's portion of the fund be doubled, and this we are mainly induced to do because of the literary excellence and classic finish of the Flail's sweet doggerel lines during and since the recent ampaign. The Hubbell fund must not all go to the metropolitan papers, he press monopolists, so to speak, if we can help it. Of course, poor Hubbell cannot be justly blamed now for verything that went wrong during the campaign, and especially so far away as North Bend was from him. but we must, some how, get the Flail nearer to where the fund was lavished. We refer the matter to George W. E. Dorsey, Esq. While we are about it, we may just as well remark upon the efforts of other literary gentlemen during the campaign, who have not, however, that we know of, made any complaint of short allowance. We can but make the suggestion, which we do in the spirit of the utmost fairness, and if Mr. Hubbell or Mr. Dorsey finds, upon examination, that due and proper attention has already been paid to the matter, and that these genlemen have been rewarded from the campaign fund, according to their respective merits, all things considered, why, then, there is no harm done. We would like to see all the literary and other brethren who used their brain muscle lavishly, be "where old Hubbell stoutly stands, and lavishes his money." The Journal, in this as in all things, is utterly opposed to riminations, in favor of one or again unjust, illiberal and outrageous disany. There's Gere of the Lincoln Journal, who wrote the platform, and helped to publish some of the idiotic campaign whoppers, he must not be allowed to stand in any place except where the money is lavished. He has been neglected entirely too much already. It does seem to us that his share has been too small altogether, or else his digestion has been exceedingly poor-there may be a little of both. Then there's the ogre of the Omaha Republican-he's big enough of course, but his diet don't evidently agree with him. He ought to be where old Hubbell stoutly stands and lavishes" some kind of food, some anti-fat preparation that would thin him down to reasonable proportions. There is no way found, as yet, we believe, for taking from the stature of ogres, or we would suggest an application. Then there's Matthews of the -the--(but we forget the name of his paper), who headed a list of names two of which were forged; his literary efforts have certainly been wearing, and he ought not be permitted to stand out in the cold, bleak winds of November, but should be made to go, "where old Hubbell [or somebody else stoutly stands and lavishes his money." There's Clark, too, of the Genoa Leader, his work was not so classical as some; not so chaste and artistic as others, but it was strictly according to order, doubtiess, and satisfactory to the customer, and we all, we don't know but it is a little late
