Matrimonial.

Wednesday evening, Aug. 6th, '84, at the residence of the bride's father in this city, Mr. George Burke, of North Platte, and Miss Rose Rickly, of Columbus, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, Rev. J. Q. A. Fleharty officiating and pronouncing the solemn words that for all future time, until death shall part them, merge two souls in one. It was intended that the wedding should be a quiet affair, the invitations comprising, aside from the the relatives, but a few of the most intimate friends. But the family connections being extensive the wedding was by no means a diminutive affair, and when all were assembled the ample parlors were found to be comfortably filled; and in point of sociability and sumptuous feasting it was all that the most fastidious could crave. Of the groom's relatives from North Platte were Mrs. Burke, the mother, and Mrs. Bratt and Louis Burke, sister and brother. The balance of the party comprised the relatives of the bride in this city and Mr. Geo. Green of Omaha and the Misses Green of Chicago, his sister and cousin, and Miss Mary Turner of this place. In the ceremony, in which the bride was lovely in a handsome dress of cardinal silk and the manly groom arrayed the regulation black, they were assisted by Miss Gussie Rickly, sister of the bride and Mr. Louis Burke, brother of the groom.

The presents were numerous, embracing rich articles of silver table service and handsome articles of virtu. Miss Rickly has resided in this city since early childhood-her father being identified with the foundation of Columbus and in its subsequent history prominent and active in its interests. As a young lady she represented the best type of our western girls, and will be missed by many admiring friends who appreciated her for her modest womanly graces and innate sensibility. Mr. Burke, like the bride he has chosen, is a typical Nebraskan, having been raised at North Platte, where he has large cattle interests and is foremost among the progressive young business men of that locality.

Before settling down to the active duties of life in the new role which select party of relatives and friends. The Journal extends to the happy couple its hearty congratulations with its best wishes for their future hap-
