"Do you take me for a dead-beat?" asked the young man.

"O, no; but if I were in your place I'd raise some cash on that big gold watch-chain and diamond-pin before trying to borrow of a stranger. You ought to have no trouble in raising one hundred dollars that way.

"I suppose not, though they are keepsakes and I hate to part with them. Nevertheless, it doesn't seem right to wear them while I am dead broke. If I had fif--'

Here he paused and detached the chain from his watch and removed the pin and laid them down.

"I am not in the pawnbroker business," said the capitalist, "but you can send for these articles any time without paying interest. Here's the fifty dolars you want.'

The young man had been gone an hour when a friend came in, observed the articles, and after a brief inspection remarked:

"You must be about the tenth man he struck.

"How-what?"

"Young man-busted troupe-wants to get to New York. That's a washed chain, and this diamond is only glass!" A call at a jeweler's proved that such was the case. - Detroit Free Press.
