How Women Who Live Away From the Centers of Fashion are Able to Cut Their Garments as Stylishly as Those in the Big

One often hears of the severe fashions of "ve olden times;" of plain skirts and bodices, fine in material but simply constructed, even for "the Sunday best," and we can but look in astonishment to see the contrast a few years have brought about. Wondering how this great revolution had taken place, a reporter called on a large fashion-house to make inquiries. Having stated his object, he was conducted to a suite of rooms, each occupied by a number of pretty girls, all basily engaged in cutting and folding papers.

"When dresses became more elaborate, people in moderate circumstances, little able to afford dressmakers' bills, and who yet wanted to keep up with the fashions of the day, were at a loss to know what to do, till the inventive genius of man came to the rescue with paper patterns. This idea gave rise to a large business, which was taken up by a few companies, generally in con-nection with the sale of sewing-machines, thus combining the advertising power needed for the two departments Since then several houses have started independently, and one large firm has even given up the machine department, paper patterns having absorbed all the capital, time, and attention of the com-

"Will you telll me how the patterns are made?

"When a design has been submitted designing styles is a profession by itself-either made up from paper or shown from a French drawing or plate, and has been approved, competent fitters imitate the design in cheap muslin, simply basting the parts together, yet being extremely careful to obtain a per-fect and well-fitting model from which the pattern may be copied. These models, to insure a sure and stylish figure, are fitted to a live model, who wears the ghostly dress till every plait is properly adjusted and the garment made to compare exactly with the original design. This cloth model is then sent to the description-writer, who carefully rips it apart, at the same time marking each portion that it may be exactly replaced from the directions she writes to accompany each pattern. Next comes the grader, who takes the dissected garment and cuts an exact pattern of each part, putting in all the notches and perforations as marked upon the cloth by the description-writer. The latter by this time has sent the directions to the printer, who is fast making ready the envelopes to hold the pattern when completed." "How are they made to fit different persons?

"The grader, who has a system of measurement known only to the profession, prepares separate patterns or duplicates of the garment properly en-larged or diminished to suit both great and small. He sends these paste-board patterns of the different sizes to the cutters, who stand before large tables with immense sheets of tissue paper in layers of fifty spread before them. The pattern is then marked upon them and cut with large shears, and then is handed to girls, who with trained finfiers rapidly fold and place them in the envelopes now in waiting.

"Much art work is required in an establishment of this kind, as the cloth model, after fitting, has to be sketched by skillful artists, who are to bring out in the most graceful manner the curves, folds, and various novelties represented in the fashion, to make as acceptable a wood-cut as possible to use in the illustrated catalogue, upon the envelopes and other advertising mediums. Most houses issue a fashion paper, a few spicy and catching notes from the outer world helping the circulation of what without these would be a pure advertising sheet."

"Are these patterns much sought after?"

"Over a million of patterns are sold yearly by one house, agencies being established all over the world, though it is coneeded that the most substantial orders are from the growing West and from towns where the facilities for obtaining reliable styles are few and feeble. A love of being a la mode lies either latent or expressed in the heart of every woman, and to the favored ones living in the city a walk down the leading street or avenue brings to the mind of both young and old some new idea of dress, with which the country girl can only be blessed by the advent of a city visitor or by the fashion papers brought by the kindly mails. These papers are eagerly waited for and grasped on their arrival. Each new style is conned and criticised, and the want of the heart filled and happiness made complete by the knowledge that a few cents will bring the requisite pattern and full directions for the making of the garment desired."

out a month?" "From fifteen to sixty new styles are manufactured monthly, and these sometimes form a nucleus for a two hundredpage magazine partially made up of stories, articles on art decoration, practical housekeeping. etc., forming still another solid medium for farther circulation of the styles manufactured. Twice a year styles are "killed" in order to keep the stock reduced to the proper number. The undesirable fashions are easily detected on examining the orders, which reveal sometimes a fickle and changeable public taste. A stroll through an establishment like this described is interesting as illustrating a with unnatural appetites. A STRANGE PHENOMENA.

What an Eye-Witness Has to Say About the Underground Fires Now Raging in High-land County, Virginia. Among the recent arrivals in the city was Mr. Edward B. Elder, of Highland County, Virginia. Of late there have been reports from that section of the country of a strange phenomena which was said to have been witnessed in the mountains a few miles from Monterey Court House, Highland County, where the earth was said to be one burning mass. The fact that Mr. Mulhatton was known to be in another quarter of the globe gave the story some credence, and more especially so as it was vouched for by responsible men. A reporter, learning of Mr. El-der's arrival, went in search of him last night to see if he knew anything concerning the matter. He was found comfortably ensconced in a cushioned chair at the Galt House, talking to some friends. When asked if he had heard of the strange performance nature was said to be guilty of, he replied: "It is certainly true, and is the most remarkable thing I ever heard of. From present indications I should say that we are likely to have another edition of Mount Vesuvius produced in the mountains of Virginia. The phenomena consists of fires which seem to be raging inder the earth, on top of the peaks in Highland County, and the ground for a siderable distance seems to be a smoldering mass. The first heard of it was a report brought by a boy who claimed to have walked over the place which was on fire. The country around is almost inaccessible, and it is very seldom that any one ventures so far up on the mountains, therefore it was only by accident that the discovery was made. A few days ago the boy, who was in search of some lost sheep, wandered on foot among the hills, until he got several miles from home. All at once he felt the air grow warmer, and experienced a strange sensation, as if some burning substance was beneath him. He was on an elevated plateau, probably a quarter of a mile square, on the top of one of the small mountains. At first he was greatly alarmed and started to run away. His curiosity overcame his fear, however, and he stopped to see if he could find the cause of the unusual warmth. He stooped and placed his hand on the earth, and was startled to find that it was so hot as to almost blister his flesh. He did not pursue his researches any further, but proceeded at once to his home, where he told of the strange occurrence. No faith was put in the narrative, and it was thought by the neighbors that the youth was going crazy.

'The news finally reached the town of Monterey, and some scientifically-in clined persons determined to investigate. Procuring the boy for a guide, they went to the place and found that all he had stated was true. When they returned they told even a more wonderful story than that told by the boy. This produced a great sensation throughout the immediate country, and a great many persons were nearly frightened out of their wits. The superstitious were of the belief that the day of judgment was close at hand and began to make preparations to respond to the call of the trumpet, which they momentarily expected to wake the silence of the mountains. I lived some distance away, but when the news reached me I determined to satisfy myself. After nearly a day's travel over the rough mountain road, which wound around cliffs at the foot of overhanging rocks, I arrived within a short distance of the region. I here left my horse, and, together with a couple of friends who had accompained me, proceeded as best I could to the place indicated. I had heard exaggerated stories, and was almost prepared for anything, but I must confess that I was greatly startled. The earth for yards around seemed to be a smouldering heap and was as hot as an oven. In places a hard crust had formed over the clay, and large fissures made by the heat. The air seemed very dense and foggy, and in many places a bluish smoke broke through holes in the earth and spread over the mountain tops. We dug down to the depth of probably three feet and came to a yellowish sort of clay which was almost as soft as putty. When a shovelful was thrown out on the ground it smoldered like a heap of ashes, and a quantity of smoke seemed to rise from it. It was very hot, and glowed with a strange brilliancy, which lasted for hours. We tried the experiment of digging down in a number of places, and always with the same results. The deeper we went the more pronounced was the phenomena, and we found it difficult to stand over the opening. How long this has been in progress no one knows, and the most learned are baffled for a reason. It looks as if a volcano was at work and ready at any moment to burst an opening through the earth and throw out its volume of smoke and fire. Hundreds of people have visited the place, and all have come away more mystified than

m Old Soldier's Ability to Foretell Storm Through an Injured Leg. The surgeons of the Jefferson college hospital in this city, writes a correspondent from Philadelphia, have been very much interested recently in a somewhat unusual case that has been in their hands for treatment. It is that of a man who may be described as a human harometer. So far, however, from boasting of his power to foretell changes in the weather, the patient, whose name is Frederick Guyer, went to the hospital hopes that the surgeons might cure him of his malady. During the war Guyer was Captain of Company D. Ninth New York Volunteers. Early in the morning of the second day's fight in the Wilderness he was struck by a Minie rifle ball, which penetrated his right leg three inches above the knee. The engagement was so hot at the time that his comrades could render him no further attention than to place him nder a tree somewhat out of the direct line of fire, and there he remained for thirty-six hours, when a change of front by the Federal lines left him in Confederate territory, and he was taken prisoner. The rebel surgeon into whose hands he fell insisted upon amputating his leg, and the operation was roughly performed by candlelight, the limb being aken off at the thigh.

"Six or seven days after that," said Captain Guyer to the Times' correspondent this morning "I began to feel severe pains in the stump, and have never been wholly free from suffering since. The sensation is apparently in the foot. I have never felt any pain that seemed to come from the thigh, or. indeed, from anywhere above the ankle. There is usually a twitching sensation, such as a man experiences in the electric bath, at the point where the great toe joins the foot. Sometimes there is a similar feeling in the little toe; then, again there is a burning sensation across all the toes, and occasionally a pain in the heel. Before my treatment in the hospital I could always tell by the increased severity of the pain when we were going to have a storm. It was especially severe just before a north or a northeast wind began to blow, but when there was a big storm coming my toes would begin to ache three or four days in advance, and as the storm approached the pain would become so intense as to almost set me crazy. You remember the big electric storm we had three years ago, when the aurora filled the sky at night, and all the telegraph wires were disarranged. I was living then in West Twenty-eighth street, New York, and felt the storm coming three days before it appeared. I suffered more at that time than on any other occasion. The pain grew more severe as the storm approached, seemed to vary with its distance and its fluctutions, and reached a climax just before it broke. Then the painful sensations began to pass away, and in a few hours, while the storm was still raging, I was at ease again. I could always foretell any change in the weather, either from fair to stormy or from stormy to fair, and could also tell its severity. A local storm or one of light magnitude affected me but slightly, while a general storm was announced by its unpleasant forerunners according to its magnitude; and, similarly, I knew by the relief from pain when clear weather was com ing. Since leaving the hospital I have been comparatively free from pain, though I still feel occasional twitches.' The operation performed on Captain Guyer was as remarkable as his disease. It consisted of the removal of a number of large bulbous formations from the stumps of the nerves. Bulbs about the size of the middle finger of the average man's hand and nearly an inch long were cut off from the greater and lesser sciatic nerves, and smaller formations were removed from other nerves. In all six of these abnormal growths were found and removed. The patient was kept in the hospital four weeks, and was discharged about two weeks ago, though he still reports periodically for examination and treatment. The wounds made by the scalpel are healing nicely, and the doctors think that when the inflammation subsides no more pain will be felt. The patient is about forty-five years of age, of slender build, and, aside from his peculiar malady, is in good health. He has never worn an artificial leg, but has al-ways used crutches. Dr. John H. Brinton, the operating surgeon, is preparing a monograph on the case for publica-

are likely to remain, indulging in all the horrible rites and acts of cannibalism. There are many restrictions which commercial transactions, besides the unfairness of the laws; in brief, there are no laws framed that afford protection to the white. This rule is carried to such an extent that Judges are afraid to give a verdict in favor of a foreigner, no matter what crime the black may have committed. The dreadful massacres that took place during the revolution are related with minute accuracy, and the only man who had any humanity in his composition was Toussaint, the hero of the time, who with the true instinct of a General, foresaw that his undisciplined forces could not cope with the perfect discipline of the European troops. He, therefore, in 1795, formed four regiments of two thousand men each. whom he had drilled daily by French soldiers, his former prisoners. "During the continuous fighting, which occupied a considerable period, Toussaint showed great magnanimity and control. and what was of great importance to the unprotected, when his word was once pledged he never broke it." Passing over this busy period, we can not find as the years roll on that the brutal nature of the Haytians had changed one iota, and it is difficult to decide which are the most bloodthirsty-the negroes or the mulattoes. "When the decree was issued by Dessalines that mulatto children should inherit the estates of their white fathers, two young men met, and one said to the other, 'you kill my father, and I will kill yours; which they accordingly did, and took possession of the estates." Now for a black example. "A negro General, grandfather of a lady I knew in Hayti, went to Dessalines after the appearance of the decree, to murder the white French left in the island, and said: Emperor, I have obeyed your decree, I have put my white wife to death. 'Excellent Haytian,' answered he, but an infernal scoundrel. If ever again you present yourself before me I will have you shot. No portion of the book is more striking and so likely to prove the retrograde condition of the people than the revolting custom of the voudoux worship and its attendant horrors of cannibalism. The obscenity of the rites and the hideous practices are best described in the author's own words: A child has been stolen for the purpose of making a feast. "She was thrown on the ground, her aunt holding her by the waist, whilst the papaloi pressed her throat and the others held her legs and arms; her struggles soon ceased, as Floreat had succeeded in strangling her. Then Jeanne handed him a large knife, with which he cut off Claircine's head, the assistants catching the blood in a jar; then Floreal is said to have inserted an instrument under the child's skin, and detached it from the body. Having succeeded in flaying their victim, the sesh was cut off from the bones and placed in large wooden dishes; the entheir arrival Jeanne rang a little cred song sung. The Relations of Females in Turkey

On the street the women are models of propriety. They never speak to a man on such occasions, though they will stare at a foreigner with simple and child-like curiosity. Fiances are allowed to walk and talk together, and it is the correct thing for accepted lovers to serenade their dulcineas in the evening with a guitar. The Atter custom seems to be in the nature of a final test of the strength of the bride's attachment. Certainly from what I heard, if she can stand his music with composure, there are few trials as bad that will come to her in after life, unless he sings again. There has been the same loosening of rigidity of late years in the matter of women going abroad alone as in other lines of Turkish conduct. To read the old statutes one would think the lines very hardly drawn, Thus in the time of Mourad III. the women were forbidden to wear bright colors, or sail in a caique without their husbands, and if a woman was found in the streets alone it was the duty of every good Mouradian to stop her, reprove ber, and order her to go home. To-day the statutes are less severe, but in dead earnest as far as they do go. But the women are more careful, and hough they are seen everywhere, riding in the cars, buying in the bazars, and lunching quietly in the cemeteries, they never venture to speak to a stranger in the street.

-The Yale College catalogue, just out, announces that the vacations are to be on a new plan. The summer vacation of 1885 will be for thirteen weeks instead of twelve, postponing the opening of the next college year until September 24. The Christmas vacation this year will therefore be only two weeks-from December 22 until January 6-instead of three, as formerly. The total number of students in all departments is 1,086, to a corresponding total of 1,092 last year.

-It is reported that Mr. Ira D. Sankey, Mr. Moody's associate, has decided to use a portion of the profits accruing from the sale of "Gospel Songs" in erecting and furnishing a public library building in New Castle, Pa., Mr. Sankey's home. The profit from the sale of the books has been very large, but a practical short hand reporter and a the evangelists have refused to apply a cent of it to private ends. The fund is ased to found or maintain religious institutions, as the evangelists may direct. In New Castle, with its large manufacthickness, and buried Hile much as turing interests, there is great need of such an institution as Mr. Sankey pro--The "City of Churches" is Brook- poses founding. - United Presbyterian.
