the particulars. As I didn't feel very sick, I fancied holding down as many chairs in a that I had come in contact with a real bonanza; for I had nothing to do but lie in bed night and day, and that never grew monotonous. Not feeling the need of a doctor, I requested the family to, allow me to save them the expense of one, inasmuch as he would be obliged to report the case, and l felt slightly sensitive about being carried down-stairs by the arms and legs, and rudely carted away to a hospital. It was deemed proper to get me as door-step who refused to dust when far from the bosom of the family as possible, so a bed was fixed for me in the garret, and the scuttle thrown open. It was in the month of June, and there was no danger thing to eat, and be mighty impudent of taking cold. I used to lie there and think how the boys were working, and what a fine time I was having lying there counting the stars through the scuttle and watching the clouds roll by. When I heard other members of the family hurrying through breakfast to catch a certain ferry-boat, which involved missing : second cup of coffee, I felt like a bondholder in the knowledge of the fact that I was having a vacation.

"How are you feeling this morning?" the old man would shout at pretty long range. "Oh, pretty sick, thank you," would answer pleasantly: "just come up and see the spots on your son." "Do you want a doctor?" "Yes.

"Which one do you want?" "Dr. Goldsmith-Citizen of th

When my brother gazed upon me, and thought of the time I was having. he became sick with envy. He said that I was always having good luck of some kind. To hear him talk one would think I had fallen heir to a handsome fortune. I was the pampered child of sickness; he was the unhappy victim of health.

After I had been rusticating in that garret for a little over a week. I one day became greatly alarmed for the first time. To myindescribable horror I found that I was getting well. My bubble of happiness had burst. My gilded dream of joy was over. I was slowly but surely getting well. At the population.
