kitchen he would find a boy seated on a bench having in front of him a spoked wheel like that of a rudder. Over the wheel is placed a series of sixteen numbers covered with black shades, while beside it are two handles like levers. Another customer is heard entering the restaurant; he seats himself at a table. punches out what he wants, and presses he electric button at his side. Down falls the shade from over No. 2 of the wheel. The boy pulls out a connecting switch marked No. 2, gives a haul at one of the levers, and turns the wheel. The haul at the lever pulls the No. 2 table under the shelf and places it on a well-oiled tramway, and the turns of the wheel bring the table along the tramway until it reaches the kitchen. On the table the cook places the order, the boy reverses the wheel, this time keeping his eye on a pliable flat wire which runs around the hub of the wheel and which is marked with numbers up to sixteen. As soon as No. 2. marked on this band, reaches an index, the wheel is stopped, the lever reversed, and the customer is served. All the tables can be moved at once by the transfer of the switches, or as many as orders come from. What is claimed by the incentor is economy of time to the customer, expense to the proprietor, the avoidance of complaints, the absence of noise, and strict check on the kitchen.
