Better Than a Trail Upon the Prairies

In a Blinding Sndwatorth. Two travelers were lost on a far western prairie during a driving snowstorm. Night was coming on, the trail was obscured by the swift-falling flakes and it seemed as if they were destined to perish far away from home and friends. But suddenly one of them turned his face to the north, whence the ice-laden wind came in cutting blasts, and bidding his comrade follow. walked with swiftness and confidence against the storm. Miles onward they pressed, the one who had first faced the storm leading always, with a step that was strong and steady and an expression that told of hope in his heart.

Darkness came down upon the treeless plain and the storm increased in fury. Directly a light twinkled in the distance, and, quickening their pace, the travelers were soon receiving the hearty welcome of an old settler and his kindly wife. When his guests were enjoying their pipes before the roaring blaze in the big fireplace the old settler said:

"The trail you were following runs full five miles to the south of us. What good piece of fortune brought you through this terrible storm to our cabin door?"

"It must have been the hand of Provdence," said the old settler's good wife, who was removing the remains of the supper.

"Well, very likely it was," answered the traveler who had led the way through the snow and darkness to the rude but cheerful prairie home. "Very likely it was the hand of Providence, but you, good madam, were the instrument which that hand used to bring us numbed and weary wanderers to your hospitable door. You were boiling cabbage, you know, and we were leeward, and once I got your bearings with my nose, which I think a very reliable one, I had no difficulty in reaching the human habitation I knew to be somewhere in the dark and mysterious gions were under the dominion of the Turks, whose possessions on the Continext of Europe covered an area of tifteen thousand four hundred and fortyfive square miles. But from this period the decadence of Turkey commenced, and, with the exception of her temporary success against Austria in 1739, she went on losing territory to such an extent that upon the eve of the war with Russia she had only nine thousand four hundred and fifty-six square miles of territory, of which two housand nine hundred and forty-eight miles were governed by Princes, who merely owed her suzerainty. The Beriin treaty deprived her of four thousand five hundred and fifty-eight miles, so that from 1700 to 1878 the Ottoman Empire lost in Europe ten thousand six hundred and sixcy-six square miles, out of which eight thousand nine hundred and two were conquered by Russia, who has annexed four thousand eight hundred and sixteen square miles. After the war of 1877-8 Russia annexed four hundred and sixty-eight square miles in Asia Minor and one hundred and sixty-seven in Europe, while Austria annexed one thousand and seventy-three (Bosnia and the Herzegovina), and England one hundred and seventy-four (Cyprus.)

----TORNADO PREDICTION.

The Main Peculiarity Upon Which the Signal Service Advices Are Based. The most remarkable and interesting feature of the development of tornadoes is the fact that they nearly always form southeast of a moving center of low pressure, and their tracks, scattered here and there, conform closely to the progressive direction of the main storm. For example, on February 19, 1884, 44 tornadoes occurred in Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina. but principally in Georgia and Alabama. They developed at a distance of from 500 to 2,000 miles from a storm center that moved across the northern part of the United States, beginning at the northern extremity of the Rocky Mountains in Montana, thence southeasterly through Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin to Northern Illinois and Indiana, northward through Michigan across Lake Huron, disappearing north of Quebec. This sudden, sharp turn of the storm center southward into Illinois and Indiana seems to have relation to the unprecedentedly large number of tornadoes that developed not far from the South Atlantic coast, extending inland as far as Southern Illinois and Indiana. This southward lunge of a mass of cold, moist air seems to have caused the abnormal conditions of temperature and dew-point and the high winds necessary to cause the most tremendous exhibition of destructure tornado power ever recorded by the Signal Service. This invariable location southeast of the storm center is one of the main peculiarities of tornado development upon which the predictions depend .- William A. Eddy, in Popular Science ---
