"We go down to the ship yards and buy the butt ends of masts. Some are six or seven feet long, and some not over two or three, and we make big figures or little figures accordingly. Out of a seven foot stick you can get a good forty dollar figure. We take the stick out in that back room first, where we have a dirt floor. Here we hew them into something like a general outline. Then we hoist them upstairs, where we chip them down until we get to the fine touches and sand paper; then they come down to me and I fix them out with a stunning coat of colors on their wooden clothes, put them on rollers and trundle them out among the rest of the gang out there, where they wait until they make a mash and are carried away. I also take battered and weather-stained figures and put on an ear here or a nose there, or paint a blind eye into life again, rig them out in a brand new suit of clothes, and there they are. I get anywhere from ten dollars to forty dollars for the images-rarely over forty dollars. There are only two or three other shops, and we send images all over the country.

"Oh, of course styles change, but the genuine old roving redskin with a bad eye and an ugly looking tomahawk in his hand is the stand-by-that is, in the majority of the Eastern and Middle States. When you get way out West there is quite a run of just such flash Bowery girls as I am painting up here now. Dudes had quite a go for a while. I have got fully twenty-five dudes planted around in Brooklyn and New York even now, though dudes are on the wane; and Pucks, that were so popular a few years ago, are now so much dead wood on your hands. The Scotchman has gone for good. I guess, though I hear he is still all the go over in England. But the plain old war whoop savage of the plains is the only chap you can bank on as steadily trustworthy. Indian maidens do very well. but not so well as the fine old goredrinking warriors, with feathers and meat axes.

"We prefer to sell direct to retail dealers, though the big wholesale men try to buy of us quite often. But, you see, they want to give away the images as premiums to heavy customers, and so they want to get them for next to nothing.

"It takes about three days for carver to make a fine big image, and he makes four dollars to five dollars a day at it, according to the quality of his work.-N. Y Sun.
